ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, Sept. 25th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, Sept. 23rd.

THE Times correspondent, telegraphing from Calcutta on the 11th inst., reports that Afghan news is very meagre. The Ameer of Bokhara has been ill at Karshi, but the report of his death is probably untrue.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has personally inspected another flooded district, Moorshedabad, where he finds that the reports of damage have been much exaggerated. "To compensate for their losses on the aus and aman crops, the ryots have the promise of an unusually abundant cold weather crop, and the fertilising effect of the inundation will guarantee a plentiful yield both of rice and rubber for several years to come. Great benefits are also anticipated by the cultivators from the destruction of caterpillars and other insects which cause great damage in most places. The Lieutenant-Governor has seen that the ryots' own resources have enabled them to sow kalai; but for wheat and barley, for which the land requires careful preparation, advances will probably be necessary."

REPORTS have been received from the tea districts that the weather in Assam and Darjeeling continues unfavourable. The blight in Terai will seriously affect the output. The weather in Kachar is more favourable. The low estimate for the season of 110,000 maunds of indigo is given. The latest reports tend to show that Mysore is fairly safe from the threatened famine. The imminence of the calamity has been of service in testing the existing arrangements for providing against the consequences of serious drought.

It is satisfactory to be informed that the Sappers and Miners in each Presidency are to be increased by one-half, assuredly not before the augmentation was needed. Moreover, steps will be taken to increase the efficacy of the pontooning arrangements, as well as of the submarine defences, upon which specially instructed Sappers will be employed.

ABOUT 40,000 men will join the Camp of Exercise. The troops detailed for the manoeuvres have been notified. It is to be hoped that commands will be given to the general officers and brigadiers who would obtain commands on active service.

FREE conveyance to their homes when on leave will assuredly be welcome to the Sepoys, and cannot have a better inception than in being granted to the Indian Contingent returning from Suakin, who have, throughout the campaign, been most scandalously treated; it has been said, we hope untruly, on account of some prejudice on the part of the "only General." Would it be too much to expect that the conveyance of the wives of Native soldiers to the place where they are to receive their pittance of the pay of their husbands when absent on service should be in some degree facilitated? It is, as we have already remarked, a purely gratuitous infliction on these poor people, the wives of deserving servants of the State, that they should periodically have to travel, at their own expense, with two witnesses to identity, to the nearest military station, distant perhaps eighty or 100 miles. We read that:—

Free railway passes will be granted from January 1 next to Native soldiers proceeding on furlough. The first application, however, of the new system will be in the case of troops returning from Suakin. The Sepoys will not be slow to appreciate the concession.

THE scheme for amalgamating the Scinde and Punjab, Punjab and Northern Indus Valley, and Scinde and Pishin Railways, thus uniting the whole frontier system under one management, will have effect from January 1, under Colonel Conway Gordon as manager. There will be several deputies controlling various sections of the system.

THIS is distinctly a move in the right direction, ensuring, if the manager be competent, something like consistent and workable arrangements on the entire frontier system. We only trust that the Sukkur-Rohri Bridge, of such vital importance to that system, is being adequately pushed on: little has of late been heard of it.

THE Political Correspondence of Vienna informs us that Lessar will go from Moscow to Tiflis, and that the Russian members of the Afghan Boundary Commission will spend the winter at Sarakhs. A few days ago we were told that Lessar was to meet our Commissioners at Zulfikar on November 10th, when the hills are covered with snow, and travelling, let alone surveying, is utterly impossible. The fact, clear to any but the wilfully purblind, is, that the Russians have no more intention to meet our Commissioners (if, indeed, they meet them at all) for any practical purpose than they had when they promised that General Zelenoi should meet Sir P. Lumsden, and sent him, as a means to that end, to "re-establish his health" thousands of miles away. The whole thing is a farce; why not recognise the fact?

THERE can, of course, be no objection to the mere statement, in plain language, of what we do claim on behalf of the Ameer, and in our own interests. But, as it is the Russians, not we, who are advancing on territory hitherto belonging to other people, it is for us, not for them, to put down the foot. Why will not people see this? Cannot our rulers see it? We had hoped better things of a Government which is, at least, not composed of dreamers and contractors.

A GRATUITY has been granted to the Indian troops employed in the Suakin expedition between March 1 and May 14.

AT the annual meeting at the Mansion House of the Zenana and Medical Mission School and Home, the committee in their report pointed to the number of pupils—sixty-one—who had availed themselves of the school, and to the progress of the work for which aid was earnestly entreated. A special appeal was made for £2,000 to enable the affiliation with a London general hospital, and thus prepare the way to become a recognised medical school, to make some payment to the lecturers, to make more complete the departments of instruction, and to more widely assist the candidates unable to fully pay for board, residence, and instruction.

WE are very greatly surprised to see that, among all the honours conferred by the Khedive on account of the campaign in the Soudan, as published in last Tuesday's Gazette, not a single recipient is an Indian officer. Throughout the campaign the Indian Contingent has been snubbed by the "only General" to the utmost, and this is the last occasion on which he will have the opportunity of showing his animus as regards it.

It is a right move to give furlough with free passage to and from England to British warrant and non-commissioned officers serving in India. There cannot be a doubt that this will tend to make Indian service far more popular than hitherto with the lower ranks of the Service.

INDIGO returns show, says the Pioneer, 165,507 maunds; from Bengal, 19,688; from Behar, 62,038; from Benares, 25,141; from the Doab, 59,660. The Bengal crop for next season is expected to reach a slightly higher figure than that above given.

A GOOD deal was said about the Holkar's offer of his contribution, and of the services of his army having been made under pressure from the Viceroy's Agent, Sir L. Griffin. This insinuation was, of course, promptly, and, no doubt, truthfully, denied. But, somehow or other, official denials receive but a modicum of credit, and some people seem to suppose that Native Princes have to be "squeezed" before they will make up their minds to contribute to anything not originated by one of themselves. We are, therefore, the more pleased that the Maharajah of Benares, on seeing an allegation in a paper called the Indian Mirror to this effect, did, in sending a contribution of £100 to Lady Dufferin's fund, expressly state that, during his long rule, he had never been pressed by any Government officer for subscriptions to any object whatever.

It is amusing to be at length told by the Pioneer what we have repeatedly urged, and what no sane person can ever have doubted, that the Afghans' feeling towards us is cupboard love. They want rupees, tomans, roubles, what not. They would be but too glad to have the oyster, and give England and Russia the two shells. What we have always felt is, that we have, as both Vambéry and Boulger have pointed out, given them money—not to speak of money's worth in the shape of arms and ammunition—unconditionally. Half what we have thus handed over to a possibly treacherous ally would have purchased for us from any one of the later rulers the fee-simple of all Afghanistan, with as good a title—ce qui ne veut pas beaucoup dire—as most Oriental rulers can convey, and certainly as good as Germany, France, or Russia can claim for any of their late appropriations of territory.

We could—but so can the Russians—do almost anything in Afghanistan by discreet outlay. We found in Kandahar five years ago the power of the almighty rupee. To the full as many merchants' as maidens' hearts were aching when the last of our men filed out of Kandahar, and gladly would the troops (of course plus the rupees) be welcomed back again.

"THERE can be really no permanence in our arrangements with Russia in Central Asia until the question has been settled at the point of the sword," says the Pioneer, and we thoroughly concur in the opinion.

We are constantly hearing of new passes which turn Zulfskar, which turn this or that of the better known Bamian passes, and so on. Generally these are held up to our astonished eyes as a kind of bugbear. We are, therefore, not sorry to hear of one through the Hazarajat which may be really useful to us. The villages through which it passes, says the military correspondent of a contemporary, can feed a large force, and the route, "both as a connecting link between Herat and Kabul, and between both of these cities and Balkh, is of the highest importance."

COLONEL CHESNEY'S place as Military Secretary to the Government of India is to be filled—and, we hope, well filled—by Colonel Newmarch. No one will grudge Colonel Chesney his well-earned rest, nor could he have taken furlough at a better time than that which will enable him to join Sir F. Roberts in the conclave to be held at the War Office to settle the details connected with the reorganization of the Indian Army. But we are much mistaken if Lord Dufferin do not bewail the loss of the Colonel's experience and proved discretion.

WRITING of Lady Dufferin's fund for bringing out lady doctors to India, the Indian Witness says:—"We notice that some of our Bombay friends, not unnaturally, assume that Lady Dufferin borrowed her ideas from the leaders of the movement in that city, but such was not the case. The originator of the present movement was none other than the Queen-Empress herself, who personally commended it to Lady Dufferin's attention when she was setting out for India, but the details of the scheme are Lady Dufferin's own."

THE other day Mr. S. A. Jackson, late of the Indian Merchant Service, gave a lecture at the Aquarium on the subject of forming an Indian Native naval reserve, adding that it was desirable to train Lascars as seamen and marines, allowing them to become naval reserves, with the ultimate object of future employment on board our men-of-war, should war break out and fast-armed cruisers be required to protect our trade in Eastern waters. "Lascars were preferred by the P. and O. and other steamship companies for their docility, temperance, and obedience. As there were so many foreigners on board our merchant ships, when it became necessary to call upon our naval resources the trade of the country would be under the care of foreigners, who would form the crews. This was a danger arising from our want of seamen, especially drilled men, for fast-armed cruisers." It was moved, and carried unanimously, "That, in the opinion of this meeting, a native naval reserve is of the first importance for the protection of our Indian Empire, as in case of naval warfare the resources of this country would be taxed to protect our own coast."

THE Rast Goftar says that the nomination of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji to a seat in the Bombay Legislative Council has been approved of by the entire Native community. Mr. Dadabhai is considered to be the representative not only of the Native community of Bombay, but of the whole of India.

IN sending Colonel Lockhart to Gilghit we have undoubtedly taken a decided step towards foiting, in that quarter at least, Russian intrigues, which are known to be rife there as elsewhere. The determination to have a permanent Resident in Kashmir is another step (which we have often advocated) in the same direction. We are inclined to agree with the Allahabad paper that Colonel Lockhart's mission, though it started with all the unostentatiousness and unobtrusiveness of a Russian "scientific exploration," is "engaged on an enterprise quite as essential to the safety of the Empire as the somewhat dubious divergations of the Boundary Commission."

A CURIOUS point has been raised in the Revision Courts, which we give in the words of the St. James's Gazette :—

Is a native of British India a British subject in the full sense of the term? The Revising Barrister disallowed the suffrage to a person who was otherwise qualified, on the ground that he was an alien in this country in common with all other subjects of the Empress of India. If the disabilities of alienage attach to our Indian fellow-subjects, Radicals will be deprived of the privilege of returning a Bengalee Baboo to represent them in the next Parliament. That subjects of the Kaisar-i-Hind rank in this country as foreigners, and require to be naturalised in order to become subjects of the Queen, is doubtful, however; and since a Jamaica negro equally with a Jamaica planter, or a Maori equally with a New Zealand colonist, can qualify for the franchise by residence in this country, there can be no objection per se to the fact of Natives of India doing so. The Queen's Proclamation of 1858 surely acknowledges them as British subjects, and we have yet to learn that there are degrees in that status.

THE Madras Times gives the following under the appropriate heading "Good News for Indian Officers":—

We learn from Simla that all existing furlough rules for Indian officers are to be abolished, and that, in lieu of the present arrangement, officers will be allowed to proceed on leave on rules very similar to that now governing British officers in India, that is, leave will be granted as the exigencies of the Service will permit, or medical certificates may require; all furlough counting as service. Leave and allowances will be regulated according to service, irrespective of personal appointments. These proposals of the Government of India have been sent to the Secretary of State for final sanction, and may be expected to come into operation almost at once.

A correspondent writes to the Russian paper Shams from Balkh on the Amu-Daryá :—

The gradual advance of Russia on Herat has its advantages for Afghanistan. Thanks to it we are being provided with some good roads. The English Engineers are occupied now with remaking the roads hence to Kabul. According to tradition, this road was constructed first by Jews at the time of the Babylonian captivity. Subsequently it fell into disrepair; but now they are repairing it; and when the work is finished it will be easily practicable for large columns, with artillery parks and baggage trains. The construction of this strategic thoroughfare is being carried out, so it is reported, by the Anglo-Indian Government. The satisfaction at this energetic activity in improving the communications is nevertheless diminished, by letters received from Samarkand, in which is reported the Russian intention to build, on the opposite side of the Amu-Daryá, on which soon their steamers will ply, and, in fact, right opposite Balkh an entire new town; which it is proposed to call Alexandria in honour of the Czar. This new town will not only become a Russian barrier on the middle course of the Oxus, but will also gradually draw to itself the trade between India and Central Asia, which has hitherto been the monopoly of our merchants here. This is why they openly say in the bazaars, "England will not bring us much profit, but Russia will cause us much harm." On this account the population here unanimously demand that the Amir should keep no friendly terms with Russia. They further say of our Wali, Isak Khan, that he is very devoted to Russia; and whenever Russian merchants come here he receives and entertains them in his palace.

Chit Chat.

PUMPKINS are reported to be first-rate food for horses. There is but one objection to their use—the animals in question will not eat them!

FANCY the Pall Mall Gazette stating that the word of a certain leading statesman is "far less to be depended upon than that of the most unscrupulous Russian who ever deceived a foreigner." Surely it is not many months since the same authority led the world to believe that the Russians were the personification of candour and integrity. Now they are painted in far different colours, and some people prefer the latter picture as being truer to life.

THE Yankees are certainly an enterprising race. The last dodge is when infringement of the law is lucrative, and the penalty imprisonment, they hire men to go to jail, and as each offender is removed, another supplies his place. This is delicious!

FANCY the water of a lake falling eight feet in a fortnight. Japan is indeed a land of wonders.

SPELLING seems at a discount in the Japan Press. Here are two instances taken at random: "innundation" and "conqur."

To come to India and find one's husband-elect in durance vile has been the melancholy fate of the future Mrs. Fox, that gentleman having been imprisoned for one month on the score of negligence, he being an assistant-engineer on the Southern Mahratta Railway.

MR. WATT, judge of Poona, when out driving with his wife lost his control of the horse, with the result that the carriage was overturned, he himself killed, and his wife seriously injured. The accident has caused much regret, as Mr. Watt was a highly-respected and popular servant of Government.

SOME enthusiasts in England, with more zeal than discretion, are urging upon the Indian authorities to prohibit the growth of the plant from which are made the pernicious concoctions, "bhang," "ganja," and the like, but would they be surprised to learn that the said shrub grows wild on the hills and valleys of India. Even Exeter Hall, in all its might, could scarcely stop the growth of a tree which flourishes broadcast. But listen, O sapient counsellors, to the lecturing of an experienced Government official in Lower Bengal: "I cannot help believing that the dearness of opium has done much to increase the consumption of ganja." Yet the latter is the most pernicious drug which it has ever entered the mind of man to conceive; it abounds with vices, and does not possess a solitary virtue, save its attractiveness. Where is wisdom found?

At Balasore a prisoner seized a brickbat and hurled it at the magistrate's head to "draw attention to his case." Effective, doubtless, but who "purveys" brickbats in courts of justice? They are surely not part of the furniture of the trial chamber!

NEPALESE are charming. Most charming!—but only at a distance. When near they betray symptoms of garlic and "sink!" The former is a familiar friend, but for the benefit of the uninitiated it should be explained that the latter delicacy is composed of radishes, buried in the ground till nearly rotten, and then dried. The smell is abominable, and to enjoy the taste needs a Nepalese palate.

IN addition to his numerous other qualifications the Viceroy of India is a first-rate tennis player, and though he did not score a victory at the recent tournament at Simla, indisposition had to answer for more than want of skill. It must, too, have looked picturesque to have seen a Native Prince indulging in that pastime in the person of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, who can hold his own against most Europeans.

How could a company bearing the name of the "Goosery Jute Mills" succeed? Well, it did not—the end thereof was liquidation.

LONDON does not appear the only place which has idiosyncracies of numbering as regards the houses in the public thoroughfares. Poona suffers from the same complaint, and can boast that in many a street the numbers do not run consecutively, but rather according to the tastes and fancy of the numberer.

To drive an artillery team in and out of pegs placed rather promiscuously in the ground is what, perhaps, no soldier in the world but a "Britisher" can perform.

On the 23rd of August last there died at Gwalior a corporal of the Royal Artillery, by name William Whewell Slatter, a B.A. of Oxford! What a history—to begin life at college, and end it in the ranks!

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

AN ANGLO-INDIAN DICTIONARY.*

Recent events have given to matters connected with India a prominence which is scarcely likely to be evanescent unless, indeed, the Central Asian question should no longer occasion trouble and anxiety to our Statesmen. Nor are other reasons wanting to raise an interest in the land of the Pagoda tree. The journey to and fro is now completed in as many days as formerly weeks. Trips to the East are "within the range of practical politics"; friends hurry home, Natives receive in part an education in its higher branches. Even Land Bills are discussed in the country with a vehemence and rancour which seem to indicate the interest in the subject under discussion; while local men of importance occasion a flutter of excitement, which half-a-century ago would have scarcely produced a ripple on the unimpassive ocean of London society. In these circumstances it is evident, and indeed it is the everyday experience of life, that curious phrases and inexplicable terms puzzle and perplex. We read, to wit, of "zamindars" and "ryots," though many persons unconnected with the East hardly know what those words mean. To enlighten this ignorance Mr. G. C. Whitworth, of the Bombay Civil Service, has published an "Anglo-Indian Dictionary"—or, as it is fitly paraphrased, "glossary"—designed to afford information in regard to the ordinary technical phraseology which is current in India. The design is excellent, and on the whole there is not much fault to find with the way it has been carried into execution. The obvious difficulty was what to exclude and what to admit, and from this point of view Mr. Whitworth is to be congratulated on the judgment which he has displayed. With the whole range of "Wilson's" well-known glossary at his command he has resisted the temptation to overload his less pretentious dictionary with explanations which are superfluous, or terms which are seldom used; but it is open to consideration whether it was necessary to include such entries as "Central India," "Central Provinces," which come within the scope of a gazetteer rather than of a work such as Mr. Whitworth has produced. Moreover, if some places are introduced, why not others?—where is the line to be drawn? Should a second edition appear this matter merits consideration. A few emendations might, too, with advantage be made—e.g., under the head "Board of Revenue" why refer only to Madras, seeing there is such an institution in Bengal and the North-West Provinces? Again (p. 107), is Ghulám Hussein accurately rendered the slave of Hussein? Ought it not rather to be "Hussein the slave?" If otherwise it must be written "Ghulám-i-Hussein." At p. 132 true Jagirs are, as stated, "free of service;" but do they not also in some cases pay a "quit rent?" The assertion (at p. 138) that the Shiáhs hold to the view that a "Jihád" must be led by the rightful Inám is somewhat too unqualified. The allusion is, properly, not to petty "Jiháds," or holy wars—which can be waged at any time under any Muslim leader—but to the great and final enterprise which is to free the faithful from the presence of the infidel. This grand effort will need the leadership of the hidden "Mahdi," or "rightful Inám." Space precludes further references, but it would be easy to point out not a few passages which might with advantage be improved—not that these observations are penned in a spirit of captiousness; far otherwise. The work is worthy of commendation, if only because, its very nature being unattractive to the ordinary man of letters, the public owe a debt of gratitude to any scholar who will enlighten their ignorance in technical matters; and few could have done this more ably or conscientiously, so far as Indian terms are concerned, than Mr. Whitworth in his "Anglo-Indian Dictionary."

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.—ENGLISH POLICY IN THE FAR EAST.*

We have desired to notice these two books together, because both are, in a great measure, devoted to our dealings with Burma and Indo-China; as two articles in the National, and the whole of Mr. Colquhoun's brochure, touch on the subject. We have, in our last issue, so clearly "delivered our souls" as regards the matter, and so entirely agree with General McMahon and Mr. Colquhoun in condemning the late do-nothing policy, that we can, on the present occasion, afford space for little more than the utterance, by others, of our own sentiments on the topic. General McMahon, as an old and very experienced officer in British Burma, holds that there are the proverbial three alternatives, to annex, to administer under the name of protection, or to remain inactive in the most masterly manner possible.

Of Annexation we have already expressed our opinion; and the operation, which, whatever its political morality, would, at one time, have been simple enough, would be much less so now, if it be true that [the French have put the ægis of their protection as a resisting force against all attempts against Burmese "independence."

A Protectorate is a convenient term. When Cromwell's Envoy at the French Court was asked why his master, being to all intents King, did not assume the title, his reply was that the powers of a King were defined, but that Heaven alone knew what were those of a Protector. As to "ordinary diplomatic pressure" being useless with Theebaw, we are quite at one with General McMahon. We ask, in the first place, a diplomatic pressure very far from ordinary, backed, to begin with, by the display of force (to which, as the General's own article shows, Theebaw has yielded once, when he believed us to be in earnest), and if in the end (but only then) needful, by force itself.

As might be expected from his wider and more varied experience, Mr. Colquhoun looks, not only at Burma, but a great deal beyond it. His letters to the Times, now reprinted, show much foresight; and there are the strongest reasons to agree with him that our ace of trumps in the East is an alliance, not merely a commercial one, with China. We referred to this subject in reviewing that portion of Mr. Boulger's excellent collection of papers on Central Asian affairs which related to Indo-China, and need not again advert to it. We would much prefer that Mr. Colquhoun should speak for himself.

"While in China," he says (p. 172, National Review), "I found the idea in favour with Chinese statesmen, and spontaneously expressed in the Native Chinese press, that a defensive alliance should be formed with England against Russia, the traditional enemy of both. . . There is no object China would fight for, and make sacrifices for, like a war with Russia," a remark which thoughtful readers may well ponder.

We are now pretty well into the hurly-burly of a general election, with a new electorate doubling the former and new constituencies; perhaps as great a leap in the dark as ever was made, and one the results of which every well-wisher of his country will watch with the keenest anxiety. Everyone, no matter what his political inclinations, may well ponder "A Word from the Reform Club," in which the importance of the integrity of the Empire is fairly weighed in the balance against that of its internal arrangements. The paper ought to be scattered broadcast. It is as able a statement of the consequences of an absolute neglect of the foreign interests of this country as we remember to have seen; and it will, for non-Indian readers, be the pièce de résistance of the present number of the National Review, in which Mr. Keble's "Tory Ministers" gives some most interesting details, showing how even those (Mr. Cobden and Mr. Horsman) who overthrew two successive Tory Ministries lived to regret their action, and that the Crimean War was simply the result of Lord Derby's expulsion from office in 1852.

A very interesting and suggestive collection of almost identical passages from Shakspeare and Epictetus will attract attention both from Classical and Shakspearian students.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT RELATING TO BRITISH INDIA.†

We have received the usual annual Statistical Abstract for the previous ten years, which has been prepared by Mr. C. C. Prinsep, the Statistical Reporter at the India Office, with his usual accuracy and care. To notice a work of this nature in detail would be foreign to our purpose, and would require much more space than we have at command. As an instance of the details of information given, we may say that all reported deaths (both of persons and cattle) due to wild beasts and venomous snakes are set forth (down to 202 Natives in Bengal killed by alligators). We are sorry to see a steady increase in casualties from this cause, coupled with an equally steady decrease in the number of wild beasts destroyed. Over 90,000 snakes were, however, killed in 1883 than in 1882, no less than 412,000 having been put an end to. This is so far well; but 23,000 "humans" killed in a year does seem a heavy butcher's bill. We may truly say that the reader will be puzzled to suggest an Indian topic on which he will not find information in this most valuable book.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

The two articles in this number, which will chiefly attract the attention of those interested in Eastern affairs, are, Mr. Marvin's "Port Hamilton," and the continuation of the suggestions by the "Officer of the Indian Staff Corps" as to the "formation of a reserve for the Indian Army."

We are far from saying that the value of Port Hamilton as a counterpoise to Vladivostok, the recent substitute for Petropaulovski as the Russian naval station in the Pacific, is overrated in the article before us, and it may be satisfactory to those who take small account of the lapse of time to be told (p. 544) that, seven years ago, Russian officers thought that we could take Vladivostok. The real query is, not what we could have done in 1878, but what we could do now? The place is, by all accounts, proof twenty times over against a regular assault by a strong fleet, and we have only a few half rotten ironclads on the East India and China Station, thanks to the cheeseparating policy of a Government which was "Liberal" only in squandering away the interests of the country, and, in that respect, as we shall ere long know to our cost, was lavish enough.

The true policy, it seems to us, is, not to consider a possible gain in one point as counterbalancing a pretty certain loss in another; and we deplore all writing which tends to obscure the real issue. No Vladivostok would, as the author suggests, compensate for the loss of Herat. The true policy is to hit, and to hit hard, in the quarter from which you are attacked. Roll back Russia first from the neighbourhood of Herat, if she venture to advance. Military men, to whom, and not to civilians, such a matter properly belongs, are not wanting to show how this can be done. The rest can follow. To discuss detail would be to enter on the entire plan of campaign, a task to which we confess ourselves unequal.

The Indian Staff Corps Officer's first article on the proposed Reserve for the Indian Army, indicated the forces of the Native States as the source whence the reserve should be obtained. This idea he now develops in greater detail. His argument (p. 562) is, that the armies of the Native Princes were taken into consideration "in determining the strength of the present British garrison in India," that in war we could not afford to detach a sufficient force to watch them; and to the objection that "this is not a reserve system, only a method for increasing the army at the expense of the Native Princes," he has only the answer, "what is in a name?" We could thus get "about 60,000 trained soldiers, whom we have not got now." This may be true enough, as true as that we might get from the Native Princes sixty lakhs, or, for all we know, sixty crores, of rupees. But however desirable the object, how to carry it into effect? We think it in the highest degree improbable that Native Sovereigns would, as a rule, be willing to disband the larger portion of their forces, and to place the remainder under the control of British officers, even subject to the qualification that the Native officers of their troops should serve for a while in our own regiments, and obtain commissions as officers of reserve. And, supposing the Native rulers did not consent to the arrangement, what then? Are we to force it on them, and leave in our rear, when the tug of war comes, a focus of discontent and possible revolt in each Native Court?

The matter needs to be looked at from the political, as well as from the military, point of view. From the latter the ideas put forward by our author may be sound enough; from the former they seem to us to require a good deal of threshing out.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1885.

REMARRIAGE OF HINDOO WOMEN.

AMONG the many social customs which have tended to lower the tone of Hindoo domestic life, few have had a more deteriorating influence than the arbitrary rule against the remarriage of widows. It may be likened to what is known to the English Courts as judge-made law, or to the additions made by the "Scribes and Pharisees" to the text of their own sacred books, and which additions, under various names, gradually came to be regarded as of equal authority with the original. The most competent authorities maintain that the Hindoo sacred writings do not really contain any prohibition against the remarriage of widows. But, in course of time, the prejudice against such marriages has, so to speak, crystallised, and holds the minds of the population in a thralldom which they find it impossible to shake off. Not the least of the benefits which our rule bids fair to confer on the vast Hindoo population subject to it are the relaxation, and, eventually, the abrogation of an unwritten law as pernicious as it is irrational and contrary to the dictates of nature.

Nor are indications wanting of a revolt against the insensate prohibition. Careful study of the supposed sanctions on which it was founded is tending more and more to weaken its hold on the better educated classes of the population, whose example may be expected gradually to leaven the mass. From all parts of India comes the news that the standard of revolt has been raised, and that Widow Marriage Associations are being formed.

And no wonder! A Hindoo widow's lot is one of slavery and of misery unspeakable! It is well described by a contemporary:—

When a Hindoo dies the relatives shave the widow's head and clothe her in coarse garments. Henceforward she may wear no silk, gold, or silver. She takes her meals apart, and is put to the lowest household work. Her touch pollutes. Voluntary austerities if she be conscientious, and involuntary degradation in all cases, are her miserable lot. There is no refuge for her from her wretched and unhonoured isolation without loss of honour. Her religion and social usages strictly forbid remarriage. Caste, not civil law, condemns her, and is more powerful than any imperial code. She and a second husband, if she venture and can discover a man with equal courage to remarry, become outcasts. His and her families are often visited with the same penalty. To a woman of advanced middle age, with children to atone to her by their fondness in private for the public barbarity of superstition, the ordeal must be severe. Multitudes of the sufferers are scarcely more than children themselves, and to them it is death in life. The Indian system of infant marriage does not necessarily imply the atrocious treatment of widows. It aggravates the horrors infinitely. Wives of ten have their subsequent half-century or more of life blasted without a single gleam of hope. Hindoos commonly wed when far advanced in years, or enfeebled by dissipation. They consign their poor young brides, after a brief interval, to what is a deeper grave than their own. Half the Hindoo race has this dreadful doom in prospect; and millions in reality undergo it. No one is the better, and countless hosts of lives are unspeakably the worse, for a rule which can assert no legal authority, yet is a spiked chain about the neck of every Hindoo woman.

How strictly accurate it is that the slightest participation in the marriage ceremony, even, it would seem, the mere fact of presence at it, is visited on the offender, may be gathered from the following letter, which is cited by a correspondent of a Calcutta contemporary as a bonâ fide one. The letter is said to have been written by a Talukdar in Bengal to his gomasta, or clerk:—

"Yours to hand. I am very sorry to hear that our. Chatterjee was present at the., during the marriage ceremony of the widowed daughter of X. * * * * You are therefore hereby required to instruct the washerman of the village not to wash his clothes, the barber not to pare his nails, the shopkeeper not to sell any articles to him, and the coolies not to work for him. You are further ordered to direct A. B. and C. respectively not to allow the said Chatterjee to bathe in their tanks. Fail not to give an immediate effect to my orders, and declare it to the people by beat of tom tom."

Champions of orthodoxy and widow persecution will ponder over the above, and say if it does not show that, although the law allows widows to remarry, society enforces widowhood rigorously.

A prohibition thus enforced, and against which the unhappy victim dared not openly to rebel, was, as a matter of course, evaded, and illicit connections formed. Young Hindoo widows are not believed to lead as a class the lives of ascetic contemplation of the virtues of their husbands and of the delight of reunion which, in the theological theory, compensate for their seclusion in a long gray twilight. They have to choose between being household drudges and the most abandoned of their sex. Too commonly they do not hesitate.

The hopeless misery may be conceived of a child married at ten to some antiquated debauchee old enough to be her grandfather, and, on his death, "left immured in a dreary home, to which she is an incumbrance and a reproach. Dismal as is the picture, it becomes more appalling in the lurid light of the abundant evidence which can be readily adduced of the habitual rebelliousness of the victims against their intolerable imprisonment, and of the depraved consolations they administer to themselves." The paper from which we have already quoted justly remarks, that human nature has avenged itself. Resenting the attempt to violate its laws by sentencing to a life of wretchedness those who would at one time have been immolated on the funeral pyre, or poisoned under the name of cold suttee, "Nature has mocked the defiance of its laws by Hindoos and their dogmas with a result which overwhelms their pious intentions in a flood of the bitterest ridicule. Hindooism has chosen to offer up a suttee of souls for the glory of the spirits of dead husbands, and has only succeeded in covering their ashes with shame and filth."

Various attempts have, from time to time, been made to loosen the chain, and many pundits have been found to declare (as did, according to the Bengal Spectator, those consulted by Rajah Rajbullab Roy, of Dacca, in 1756), that "women are at liberty to marry again if their husbands be not heard of, if they die, become ascetics," &c., a "sloke," or text, the knowledge of which cannot be too widely diffused.

But, as was truly remarked some time ago by our contemporary, the Times of India, "the social reformer of India must be Hindoo and not English." All English people interested in India must wish that, so far as may be necessary or advisable, legislation may be resorted to. The fact that 22,000,000 widows are, in obedience to a superstition not even enforced by the sacred books, condemned to lifelong misery, is surely sufficiently terrible in its magnitude to call for any further special enactment, which shall, if possible, relegate enforced widowhood to the limbo to which another enactment has already consigned suttee.

More faith is, however, to be placed in the effect of the example of men admittedly of the highest caste, in discouraging early, and especially Kulin, marriages, under which a Kulin will sometimes be married to a whole family of sisters in a single day, receiving a handsome dowry with each. (The Report of a committee of Hindoos of position, appointed by Government to inquire into this subject, and quoted, in a recent issue of the Madras Mail, from the Indian Daily News, mentions one case in which a Kulin contracted no less than twenty-three marriages in a single day, and adds that polygamy is habitually resorted to by these Kulins as a means of subsistence.) And it is with very great gratification that we read the remarks on this subject of that distinguished Statesman, Sir Madava Rao, a Hindoo of the Hindoos, and a man of the very highest caste. Speaking on the occasion of a lecture given at Bangalore on the child-marriage and widow remarriage questions, Sir Madava said, "I believe the Shastras do not favour early marriage. My firm conviction is that this custom of early marriage is one of recent growth. If you want to know what the early custom was, go to a country where Hindoo custom has been kept unsophisticated. Travancore is a purely Hindoo state, and has been so for many centuries. There is a class of Brahmins there of the highest class (sic). No such early marriages are practised there. Those early marriages at three or four years old are outrageous." As to remarriage, Sir Madava considers that "the Shastras do sanction the marriage of young widows, and do not prohibit the same," that the passing by the Legislature of an enactment on the subject was humane and wise, that remarriage of widows, while perfectly legal, was nowise "an infraction of the Hindoo religion so as to make the parties outcast from that religion, that persecution is unjustifiable. Do not," added he, "suppose that I have reached these conclusions at a rush. I have long been hesitating and sceptical. My approach to them has been slow and gradual, perhaps too much so." It is impossible to spread too widely the expression of such opinions, laboriously formed, and most deliberately uttered, by such a man, and their extended circulation can be recommended, as a judicious step, to every Remarriage Association.

The movement, inaugurated by enlightened Hindoos, deserves, and will assuredly obtain, the cordial sympathy of every woman who would fain see the emancipation of her own sex, and of every one, man or woman, who sincerely desires the welfare of India.

UPPER BURMA.

THE very important announcement has been made by a Service contemporary that the annexation of Upper Burma has been resolved on. It will have been seen from Mr. Colquhoun's letter in Saturday's Times, that Sir A. Phayre, the first, and ablest, Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and unquestionably the highest authority on such a subject, has seen reason to change the opinions he is well-known hitherto to have entertained, that annexation was neither necessary nor expedient. The Broad Arrow says:—

We are in a position to announce that the Government have it in contemplation to annex the whole of Burma. The Indian Government have strongly urged the adoption of this course, in order to prevent by timely and energetic action the occurrence of trade and other difficulties which are clearly foreseen and are absolutely inevitable if France is permitted to obtain extraordinary treaty powers under King Thebaw. The French Government are making arrangements to obtain that ascendancy at Mandalay which we are believed to enjoy at Cabul; but it need scarcely be pointed out that our enterprising neighbour, who is anxious to obtain an equivalent for what he has failed to acquire in China, will not stop at a mere British-Afghan parallel. The Government have been advised to sanction a descent upon Mandalay with 10,000 Indian troops, so that we may acquire undisturbed ascendancy in the interests of British trade all over a country of which we already possess half. Sir Frederick Roberts will be consulted upon the subject. His opinions may be conjectured.

The present Chief Commissioner, Mr. Bernard, is a strong anti-annexationist, but even he entertains no expectation of resistance, stating—Mr. Colquhoun is our authority—that "the people of Upper Burma are so discontented that we could probably take the country without the loss of a single life." In the undertaking we should, Mr. Colquhoun thinks, have at least the goodwill of the Chinese, who dread French proximity and intrigue at Mandalay. We referred to this subject last week, remarking on the unwisdom of having no direct official intelligence of what is going on at Mandalay. Mr. Colquhoun now points out that not only is this the case, but that we have no Ambassador in Peking, where his presence at the present conjuncture is of really vital importance. "The neglect," says the Times, "is unpardonable," an opinion which, in speaking of other vacant Embassies, we have repeatedly enforced. The Peking Embassy is not, however, an easy one to fill. It requires no ordinary man; but, again to quote the same journal, "a statesman of vast knowledge and experience, of equal caution and determination, who will not mind devoting to a position, not ranking as high as the Legation at Copenhagen, the intellectual and moral gifts of a Governor-General of India." There is much truth in this, and, if we really are going to depose Thebaw, the sooner we explain our action at Peking by the mouth of a duly authorised representative of the Sovereign the better.

THE Indian Mirror says:—

The time has now come when the selfish interests of a small bureaucracy should be set aside or subordinated to the interests of the Empire. Lord Dufferin has come out to rule a new India, and the British policy must be shifted from its old lines. The old policy will not apply to the new condition of things. If persisted in, it will ultimately lead to much mischief. Either India will have to be abandoned, or a less selfish course will have to be pursued. "India for the Indians" must be the principle by which the ruling authorities both in England and in India should now be guided. Either govern India for the Indians, or be prepared for the chance that, merely through the operation of the moral laws of the universe, Russia may one day snatch India from the hands of England. A grasping, selfish policy is quite unsuited to the present circumstances of India, and will surely be suicidal at the present moment.

THE Rast Goftar learns that a petition has been prepared by the Tanna Association for the purpose of being submitted to Government to extend the scope of the inquiry now made by the Abkari Commission to the whole of the Presidency. The petition, it is supposed, will be signed by about 25,000 persons, and will be forwarded to the Bombay Presidency Association, who will in their turn forward it to Government, together with a letter detailing the several grievances of those affected by the Abkari rules.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, October 2nd; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, Sept. 30th.

The Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta, under date 18th inst., as follows:—

No ultimatum has as yet been forwarded to Burma.

It is expected that Theebaw will be dethroned, as it is the universal opinion that no improvement is possible in Burmese affairs while he reigns. If it were known in Upper Burma that Theebaw would be replaced by another Burmese prince, very little, if any, resistance would be offered by the Burmese to English interference, even among Theebaw's Ministers, several of whom favour his deposition, while the mass of the population would rejoice at the change.

The Rangoon Gazette states that great exasperation is felt at Mandalay against the French owing to the repudiation by the French Government of the Haas scheme. All the French residents in Mandalay are stated to be under surveillance.

The Burmese are strengthening the Kudigon fort on the Irrawaddy, opposite to Minbla. It commands the river for two miles, but could be easily and speedily captured, as it can be attacked in reverse. Kudigon is the only point between the frontier and Mandalay at which any organised resistance is likely to be offered. Large quantities of stores which had been prepared for use in Afghanistan have been sent to Rangoon, and are available for any force that may be sent to Mandalay.

A letter from Upper Burma states that the Mingoan Prince has escaped from Pondicherry, and is already in the Shan States, with the intention of invading Upper Burma. This report is not confirmed, and there exists a strong feeling against the Mingoan Prince being allowed to become King of Upper Burma, owing to his known French proclivities.

About Rs. 30,000 have been collected for the fund for relieving distress caused by the floods.

Satisfactory progress is being made with the repairs to the damage caused to the railways. A large amount of labour is being employed, and it is expected that the lines injured by the floods will shortly be in full working order. The earnings of the Eastern Bengal State Railway have been seriously affected. For the twelve weeks ending September 26th the total was six lakhs less than in the corresponding period of last year.

By last week's official report it appears that in Bengal, except in the flooded tracts, the prospects of amun and rice are favourable. Other standing crops are generally favourable. Rabi cultivation is progressing vigorously. Prices are fluctuating in the Punjab, the Central Provinces, the North-Western Provinces, and Oude. They are falling in Mysore, and to some extent in Bengal. With regard to the threatened famine in Mysore continued improvement is reported, and unless the north-east monsoon fails there is now no serious cause for anxiety.

The appointment of a military member of the Viceroy's Council, in succession to General Wilson, gives scope to much speculation. Of the candidates, Colonel Chesney is regarded as a conscientious worker with broad views, and there is no reason to anticipate friction between himself and Sir F. Roberts. The only criticism against him is that he is wanting in practical experience. The one whose appointment, apparently, would give the greatest satisfaction is Sir Herbert Macpherson. Sir Herbert has had wider experience of soldiering, and possesses a more intimate knowledge of the various military departments in India, than any other officer, taking a genuine interest in economic reform, and it is to his suggestion that the Government is indebted for saving large sums in more than one military department. Shrewd and clear-headed, he is not likely to be led to sanction any but practicable and reasonable proposals. Being on good terms with Sir F. Roberts, he is considered the best fitted for the duties required. Failing Sir H. Macpherson, Colonel Chesney would not be unacceptable to the Service, but any other appointment is to be deprecated.

THE United Service Gazette remarks that Sir William P. Andrew, C.I.E., has printed in a pamphlet form some letters which he has at various times for some years past addressed to the Times on the advance of Russia. Since the year 1857, as chairman of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway Company, he has made repeated representations to the English Government of the extreme importance of connecting England with the North-West Frontier of India by steam transit through the Euphrates and Indus Valleys, and of extending the network of Indian railways to the Khyber and Bolan Passes. He has also protested again and again against break of gauge on the railway, which would in time of war cause enormous difficulties to the concentration of troops at threatened points. To this subject we have more than once called the attention of the Government. We only wonder at the supineness which neglects a matter of such vast importance.

It may not be generally known, says the Indian Tea Gazette, that there is a fairly good trade between the North-West and Cabul in tea, the figures for 1884-85 showing supplies sent forward of 8,826 maunds. This trade is capable, however, no doubt, of much further expansion. Why are no steps taken to extend it? And why is nothing done to introduce into Tibet from India the brick tea, of which some hundreds of thousands of pounds are known to find their way thither from China?

THE Sultan of the Maldives, who has rendered great services to sailors who were shipwrecked on his shores, has received a field-glass! We presume to enable him to descry his future guests from afar. Seriously speaking, this is lamentably ill-judged parsimony. Surely the lives of sailors are worth a few hundred rupees! The Bengal Times says that Captain Anson, of H.M.S. Dragon, who was recently sent on a mission to the Maldives to present the Sultan with a field-glass "as a token of the British Government's approval of the services rendered by him to shipwrecked sailors," reports that the Sultan has not been treated very fairly hitherto, having had to bear the whole expense of forwarding shipwrecked sailors to their destinations—for which his Sultanship probably thinks a field-glass is but a poor return, even with the approval of the British Government thrown in.

THE Punjabees are pleased at having a Native Judge of the High Court. We hope he will show less animus on the Bench than, as to railway matters, a brother Judge at Bombay has lately displayed. The Indu-Prakash says that "Pundit Ram Narain's appointment as Judge in the Punjab Chief Court has been an object of great rejoicing for our countrymen in the Punjab. A monster public meeting was recently held at Lahore to emphasise the public sentiment on the question of the appointment. It gives a direct contradiction to the rumours that the appointment was unpopular. It seems that Bengal lawyers practising in the Punjab are dissatisfied, and have made a representation to the Local Government against the nomination. But the public meeting sets at rest all doubts as to the propriety of the appointment, and we congratulate our Punjab brethren on their getting a Native Judge in their Chief Court for the first time."

THE Native Press is quite alive to the purely ephemeral character of the late arrangement with Russia. Here are some extracts, which we take from the Englishman:—

The complications with Russia might have been amicably settled six months ago. Lord Dufferin would not then have been so busy with the Russian question as to disregard the internal administration of India. This country and England would not have suffered by the incident at Penjdeh. The Government has not been benefited by establishing its supremacy in Afghanistan, and making frontier railways. The Russians are making similar preparations. They would not have done so if the English had not set the example. Now England and Russia stand face to face, and a war which would not have broken out for fifty years may break out at any moment.—The Ananda Bazar Patrika.

Many may be led to suppose that the complications with Russia have come to an end, and that the British Government have got rid of their anxieties. Practically this is not the case. The treaty just concluded may be said to be a treaty for a year. It will not make any change in the situation.—The Dainik.

The disputes with Russia have been settled, but only for a few days. This settlement is only to gain time for making preparations for war on an extensive scale. That the Russians will not be so easily satisfied every sensible man will admit. They will not stop until they occupy the northern frontiers of India.—The Gamvarla Prakashika.

THAT the proposed increase of the Indian Army is objected to, and retrenchment in European salaries advocated as a means of meeting expenses on this head which may be really needful, is only what was to be expected, and, if some of the utterances be a trifle strong, they are, perhaps, not unnatural from the Native point of view. Says the Charivarta :—

A good deal of money has been spent on account of the preparations for a war with Russia, and therefore reductions are being made in the expenditure. We have always seen that, whenever the British Government effects any reduction, the small fry suffer and the big guns are not touched. When reductions are made, the outlay for paper and pens is curtailed, and the salary of the poor schoolmaster is reduced; the amount which the Government spends for the purpose of education is very trifling. The authorities clamoured a good deal as friends of education. Now they have reduced the grants on primary and aided schools! If there is any necessity for reduction in this department, the salary of the inspectors should be reduced. Besides, there is no necessity for the assistant and joint inspectors. The deputies can do their work efficiently. There would be a great saving if competent Natives were appointed in the places now held by European professors.

THE Pataka is equally outspoken :—

Proposals have been made of late for retrenchment, and reduction has been made in several departments. But we wonder that it has not affected the highly-paid officials in any way. A reduction in their salaries would have affected them very little, and the object of the Government would have been easily attained. The Government is now appointing several Commissions. The Salary Commission will cost nearly a lakh of rupees. Who can help regretting that public money is wasted in this manner?

IN view of the introduction of a pigeon-post in almost every military district in Russia, says the Wehr-Zeitung, the Government have arranged with numerous fanciers for a large supply of these birds. Why is nothing being done in India in the same direction?

DURING the recess, though there be nothing to be said about Parliamentary, there is, every now and then, something noticeable about the speeches which the late Mr. Delane christened Extra-Parliamentary, utterances, and it is satisfactory that those of the Secretary for India have been plain and to the point. There is to be, as regards Burma, none of the vacillation which characterised the late Government, who were, however, usually equal to the tasks of bullying the weak and kowtowing to the strong.

THE ultimatum sent to Theebaw makes no demands which the facts do not justify. The accordance of an honourable reception to a British special Envoy, the abandonment of vexatious proceedings against our subjects, especially against the Bombay and Burma Trading Company, and consent to the location of a British Resident at Mandalay—to our mind the most important stipulation of all—are certainly not too much to insist on; and to give Theebaw four days to accept, or reject, these terms is just the kind of peremptory intimation of our resolution to “stand no nonsense” which is likely to bring him to whatever senses his debauchery may have left him. The French seem to have acted with entire fairness, and a force of 8,000 men, now about to be despatched in case of need, will doubtless render a good account of any forts which may guard the approaches to the capital.

WE extract from the United Service Gazette a notice of Major Browne's late lecture on the resources of Burma. Curses come—so people say—home to roost, and our neighbour King Theebaw's insolent reply to the remonstrance of the British Government as to his dealings with our traders will, in all probability, similarly recoil on his own pate. Major Browne thinks, correctly enough in our judgment, that the warlike operations should be almost entirely “confined to the valley of the Irawaddy, from our frontier to the Burmese capital; for on this portion of the great river are situated the richest and most important towns in the kingdom, while inland the country is thinly populated, is covered for the most part with thick jungle, and intersected by a network of rivers and creeks. The object for operations ought certainly to be the occupation and destruction of the capital. Its fall would completely paralyse the kingdom, and reduce further resistance to a minimum, for within its walls are almost all the stores and valuables of the King; and, furthermore, his only truly loyal subjects are the Burmese who reside in Mandalay and its vicinity. The frontier of British Burma is, at present, defended by the fortresses of Thayetmyo, on the Irawaddy, and Toungoo, on the Sittang. Each is garrisoned by a wing of a European regiment and one Native Infantry regiment, and a battery of Field Artillery. Since the annexation of Pegu, in 1852, no communication has existed between these two posts, but a road has now been constructed, and is so far finished that, some few years ago, Colonel Jebb, 67th Regiment, marched a detachment from Thayetmyo to Toungoo in nine days, no man suffering. Elephants are necessary, the road not being practicable for carts. It takes five days by steamer to reach Thayetmyo from Rangoon, and seventeen days at least to reach Toungoo by country boats from the same city. The distance between the posts is about 120 miles. Troops are conveyed up the Irawaddy on flats, towed by small steamers. Each flat will accommodate about 250 soldiers or a battery of Field Artillery. In case of war, conveyance for a force of 5,000 would be obtainable. In the dry weather—November till April—troops can be marched from Rangoon to Toungoo by land. There is also a practicable road from Rangoon to Prome, which is only some twenty-five miles from our frontier. ‘I think,’ remarks Major Browne, ‘that a force having for its object the conquest of Upper Burma should be formed into two corps—one the Army of the Irawaddy, the other the Army of the Sittang. The first-named corps should consist of about 5,000 men, with a plentiful supply of light guns, and should proceed up the river on flats and river steamers early in August, when the navigation is easiest, to the direct attack of the capital. A few of the most important towns might be shelled, but it would not be necessary to waste time in their capture or occupation. The land column, or Army of the Sittang, might be similarly composed, and march with the same object in view later in the year, after the capital had been occupied by the first Army. They would require to be well provided with material for crossing the numerous creeks by which the pathway from Toungoo to Mandalay is interrupted.’ In the event of a third Burmese war being forced on us, Major Browne's remarks will be found of great value and importance.”

The Army and Navy Gazette gives a sensible hint in saying :—

If there should really be a chance of a row with Burma, it would be politic on the part of the Admiralty to utilise some of those shallow-draft boats which, built for the Nile expedition, are now apparently of no use. The Irawaddy is navigable to almost any height for such craft, and if they were sent up as soon as hostilities broke out, would be able to take all defences in rear, while the chances of their coming to grief in running the gauntlet of such fortifications as might be constructed would be very small indeed. When the affair was over, they might be sold to a company as cargo-boats, to help Mr. Colquhoun in his endeavours to open up a trade-route in that direction.

THE City article of Monday's Times tells us that the Great Eastern is to be sold to-day. Is it too much to hope that the Government will purchase her? We have urged this purchase repeatedly. Surely, to be able to carry some thousands of troops round the Cape (were the Suez Canal blocked, as it assuredly would be in case of war) in about five weeks, is no trifle, and worth many times over what the ship will probably fetch. Scott Russell did not, it is true, build her for the conveyance of troops, though the sum needful to turn her into an efficient transport, both for Cavalry and Infantry, would be a mere fleabite. But even should the Government resolve on buying the vessel, they will, in all probability, only make up their minds after she has been sold to a private company or syndicate, and will have to pay three times the price for which they could have got her direct. Were it not for the vis inertiae which is so apt to grow, like a fungus, on permanent officials (who are, really, all but omnipotent in such a matter), we have not a doubt that the purchase would have been effected long ago. “Permanent officials” are so wedded to precedent that it may not be inopportune to remind them how many precedents there are for buying ships from private companies. Let them add one to the number.

Chit Chat.

WHAT is the sign of popularity? In a district in India apparently, to have fireworks discharged when you are promoted elsewhere. But that might surely be a mode of expressing joy at one's departure.

In Pondicherry there are several Roman Catholics who are also Freemasons, notably the Governor, Mr. Richard; but it was generally supposed that the two "persuasions" were incompatible.

TWENTY-SIX overs, twenty-one runs, sixteen maidens, and five wickets is not bad bowling under a tropical sun. Captain Raikes, of the Bombay Mofussil Club, is an acquisition in a match. But even this was eclipsed in the second innings of "Bombay versus the Mofussil," when Mr. Barton trundled fifteen overs, nine maidens for twelve runs and six wickets.

THE Statesman is very indignant because the firm of Rothschild will make a large sum out of the new Egyptian Loan. And why not? The only reason alleged is that the wicked Tories concluded the arrangement in question, which, therefore, ipso facto, is an "unholy scheme," and the Banking House who provide the wherewithal are dubbed "usurers." But with the Statesman the motto, is "whatever is is wrong."

SIR JOTINDRO MOHUN TAGORE versus Sir Sourindro Mohun Tagore. Both names are so much alike that judge and jury will have to keep their minds pretty clear to follow the evidence. It reminds one of the celebrated scene in Pickwick anent "Nathaniel and Daniel."

MADRAS narrowly escaped a great disaster. The train which was conveying the Governor and his wife to Poona collided a bullock-cart over a level crossing. Fancy what might have happened!

No Tory is capable of understanding Lord Ripon's far-sighted statesmanship. So says the Sabachar. Poor Tories.

"INDIA for the Indians" has long been a cry amongst those who talk most in regard to what they understand least; but now a new-fangled notion is to the front: "India for the Eurasians." No more Europeans are to be appointed to any posts in the land of the pagoda tree. Such is Mr. D. S. White's new propaganda. Fancy a half-caste Viceroy, with piebald baby Viceroys!

BOMBAY has started a "Social Purity Alliance." What next? Are all those who do not give in their allegiance to this band of zealous puritans to be considered beyond the pale of virtue? Fortunately the movement does not prosper; fifty virtuous people in the city of Bombay is certainly not a large leaven wherewith to leaven the mass. Naughty Bombay! Could not the Pall Mall be edited from the western capital of India?

BURMA has started a rice-pest, which is said to be most destructive. It rejoices in the name of "Paraponyx oxyialis," and is described as a "small animal belonging to the Pyralide family of the Heterocerous division of the insectean order, Lepidoptera; its filaments are arranged in anterior and posterior superspiracular or infra-spiracular longitudinal series." Then there is the "tracheal gill formula," to say nothing of its "pupa fusiform," its "somites" and its "thoracic convexities." No wonder rice cannot stand such a pest; the very names would ruin a crop!

RANGOON has been the scene of a riot between the long and short jacket sects of the Chinese. It seems rather strange that people should quarrel as to the length of their garments, but history repeats itself. One of the wars of extermination against the Jews which were inaugurated by the Prophet of Arabia arose from the trifling circumstance that a follower of Moses looped up the petticoat of a daughter of the Faithful!

SOME years ago Mr. R. T. Allan left numerous legacies, but an insufficient estate wherewith to pay them. However, Dame Fortune befriended the legatees—it chanced that amongst the assets was a ticket in a Viennese lottery. That ticket won a 200,000 florin prize, so that, after paying expenses, £16,000 was left for division amongst the fortunate relatives and others.

A THAKUR in Bombay has been warned that if he does not give up having attacks of "delirium tremens" he will "hear of it." Doubtless; but will he abandon the habit of drinking? If so, a new cure has been found for "dipsomania."

AN enterprising telegraph clerk has been spreading consternation in Simla by informing the world that the "Queen had got hydrophobia." The solution was that there had been a muddle between McQueen and "Queen," while hydrophobia had been substituted for Hyderabad.

THERE is a strange concatenation of events in Bombay. Mr. Fox, the engineer, was tried by the local magistrates, the High Court enhanced the sentence, and now they are deliberating whether it is competent for them to revise their own decision, and revert to the original punishment. Meanwhile Mr. Fox is, fortunately, on bail.

THE late Maharajah of Kashmir, it is said, "spared himself no pains in governing his people." Strange, for it was always understood that the "happy valley" was the most magnificent and, withal, the worse administered land in the whole of India.

WHEN an officer has been more than twenty years Commissioner of Police in Bombay he deserves a holiday, and Sir Frank Souter has richly earned a little relaxation.

AN officer of the Afghan Boundary Commission essayed to scale the inaccessible peak of "Do Snakh," but he got to no more than within thirty feet of the summit. Only one man, it is said, ever succeeded in reaching the top, and he never came down again!

POONA is disturbed. A rude person has accused them of practising the "obnoxious, caddish, not to say indecent form of dancing" known as the "Southsea cuddle."

NATIVE races are not held under the "W.I.T.C." Perhaps not; but it would have been more satisfactory to know what is the "W.I.T.C.," so, too, what is struggling home over a "T.Y.C."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

WHERE CHINESES DRIVE.*

Were it not that Interpreter Students have to pass an examination at the hands of the Civil Service Commissioners, who are inconveniently particular as to age, and that "Martin Chuzzlewit" was published when the present generation was as yet unborn, we should have taken the author of this amusing book to be the twin brother of Mark Tapley. He has certainly made himself creditably "jolly" in all conceivable circumstances, and the little volume is replete with fun and anecdote.

The writer allows himself to be introduced to his "public" by a Chinaman, who says: "Among the Students (of a former age) there was certainly no want of men of intelligence or ability; yet, after all, the only one who has left us a record of their ways is this dull, simple scribbler."

We are bound to say that we have found this "scribbler" very much the reverse of "dull," and certainly not "simple," if by that word we are to understand "unacquainted with life."

Whether in a boat on the Peiho, in which he has scarcely space to turn, and no opportunity of tubbing or of bathing in reasonably clean river water, at the Legation at Peking, where the furniture consists of two chairs and a table, or in a "temple" on the hills, where there seems to have been no furniture at all, our author presents himself as the same jovial, imperturbably cheerful, companion, whom one meets but rarely in a lifetime, and whom it is always a pleasure to meet.

It is not, however, to be supposed that, because the book is amusing, it does not contain a great deal of information. Indeed, we have rarely met with a volume which more vividly puts before the reader out-of-the-way aspects of Chinese life. Our own competitive examinations—presenting, usually the result of crammed, not of digested, knowledge—have not been universally accepted as the perfection of a test of capacity for employment in the service of the State. But, as yet, candidates have been presumed to have some knowledge of the subjects in which they were examined. We remember a distinguished Civil Servant, who habitually made his son—a lad of seven—repeat in Greek, each morning, twenty lines of Homer—of the meaning of which the poor fellow had not an idea—as a sort of entrance-fee to the breakfast table. Sung, our author's tutor, seems to have been imbued with similar ideas. He had a boy of five, described (p. 79), as pretty and intelligent, who had to repeat "page after page of the Four books." As the writer justly adds, "Fancy giving children of that age at home the Gospel of St. Luke in the original to learn off by heart before they could read even English, and long before they understood a word of Greek!"

The student interpreter's life must be an odd one. The programme of his studies includes "Tone Exercises," and "Character-slips." Any of our readers who may be disposed to "go in fir" Chinese might be pleased to hear that there are only "four hundred and odd" distinct sounds in the language; but we fear that their enthusiasm will be damped when they are told (p. 65) that by an ingenious system of inflexions of the voice the number of separate sounds is—to a Chinese ear—more than trebled.

Now, in French we have e mute, é, ê, è, but this variety of sounds, which few but Frenchmen, and most certainly no German, can render, is simplicity itself compared to the various sounds of even a and ai in Chinese. It is not surprising that the continued repetition of these marvellous "tones" occasioned the consumption of unlimited tea—we are glad it was nothing stronger—on the part of the master. What it was that the pupil imbibed to brace the muscles of his throat we are left to divine.

It must not be imagined that our student's intercourse with his tutor was confined to what we should call "business hours." On the contrary. A, to the uncivilised "foreign devil," very mysterious, letter of invitation to dinner from Tutor Sung is given, both in Chinese and English, at pp. 80–81. The usual form is

"Heedfully chosen is the—hour of the—day of the—moon whereon to cleanse the cups, and await YOUR GLORY.

A note with the salutation of—"

From dinners to other festivals, such as weddings, the transition is easy; less so that from weddings to funerals. But in China they seem to utilize the same machinery for both.

"The Chinese undertakers," we are told, "are more enterprising than ours; they will undertake with equal readiness for a wedding or a burial. The matter is simple. . . All the undertaker does is to catch some fifty or a hundred loafers, beggars, and ragamuffins, throw an embroidered cloak over their shoulders, and put a cap of the proper pattern on their heads, and a banner or emblem of some kind in their hands, and start them in some sort of order. They say that an Imperial procession is much the same, except that the robes are shabbier, and the bearers dirtier and more ragged." (We suppose Imperial processions are "done" by contract.)

The thoroughfares through which the denizens of Peking and its vicinity have to pass can hardly be pleasant "going" in rainy seasons. The "carts" are something between a schoolboy's box and a coffin. A lady, we are told, had to spend the night outside the walls because, having been informed that she had but fourteen miles to drive, she had not been made acquainted with the fact that the journey would require seven hours, and, consequently, arrived after the gates had been closed for the night. But this, bad as it is, is not the worst. The resemblance of the carts to a coffin is sometimes shown in an unpleasantly realistic fashion. "Carts trying to keep to the roadway have been known to topple over on to the footpath, and the people in them, unable to extricate themselves, to be drowned before their doorsteps."

Not that it is always an easy thing to get a "cart" at any reasonable figure. Your Chinese servants, yclept "boys," charge you nearly five times the proper rate, "splitting the difference" with the owner. On one occasion one of the students, who figures under the name of Paley, undertook to manage matters with the carman himself, discarding the intervention of the "boy." He found a man who consented to take the proper sum. Bringing him back in triumph he exhibited him to the boy. The rest of the story he must tell in his own words. "The boy looked at him from head to foot, then said, contemptuously, 'That's a missionary carter! . . . and a Christian, so can afford to do things at a loss. He looks for his profit and reward in the next world!' and the 'boy' turned away with the disgusted air of a man who finds himself unfairly handicapped."

We in England have not to go far across the Channel to behold the scrupulous observance of the jour de l'an et des étrennes. They manage things similarly in China. "New Year's Day" is to them, as in France and Scotland, the day par excellence, and "good wishes," however differently worded, are doubtless as sincere as those expressed elsewhere. "May you obtain promotion; may you beget sons; may you pass your days in riches and honour."

One hears nowadays of silos, ensilage, and what not. But we do not remember to have met with a flower silo. But here we have it at page 248. "Everything in North China that has to be kept is buried, ice, grapes, 'white pears,' as well as flowers. In the spring a rosebush will be taken out with buds undecayed and bright green leaves; indeed," says our author, "our last season's roses supplied Gordon (the dandy, it would seem, of the party) with button-holes for more than a fortnight after the pit had been opened."

One racy anecdote—the book is full of them, all exceedingly well told—and we must conclude:—"Ashton used to hold strong opinions on the immorality of borrowing books and not returning them. Fawcett had come round to his rooms to ask him to lend him Williams's 'Middle Kingdom,' as he had lost his own. 'I know, Jack,' said Ashton, as he handed him the book, 'that you'll let me have it back. You're not one of those fellows who look on a friend's book as though it were an umbrella and annex it, and say nothing about it, but just keep it to fill up their own shelves. You see,' he exclaimed, 'I have a place for all my books, and if one is lost it spoils the general effect.' Fawcett said he agreed with him, and took the book. Then Ashton said, 'If you don't mind, I'll just write my name in it.' Fawcett opened the book at the flyleaf, but Ashton didn't write his name, because there was another name there already. It was 'John Fawcett, with his father's best wishes.'"

We can only say that, if a reader of this book does not laugh until his sides ache, his risible faculties must be out of order, and the Doctor Sahib ought to be at once called in.

REFORM AND PROGRESS IN INDIA.*

The author of these scattered ideas avows that they need careful revision, "as the majority of the work has been written up for the press in haste." Nevertheless, not only are the objects of the book excellent, but they are exceedingly well set forth in the preface, which appears to us one of the best thought-out parts of the work. There can be no question that, while you are debating on which side of the horse to mount, you will not mount at all. And meanwhile "the best part of a century of British rule in India has passed away, and her Anglo-Saxon conquerors seem no nearer amalgamation with, or even appreciation of, a highly picturesque, imaginative, and artistic people, whose nature is, in many respects, the very antithesis of their own." An Optimist must, however, remember that a century is a very short time in the life of a nation, and that a nation of 250 millions. How far had the Normans "appreciated" the Saxons in Britain in 1166, a century after the conquest? Yet the nation which they had conquered numbered, probably, not five millions; and the number of Normans imported during the first century after the Conquest—not to mention the great numbers who frequented the Court of Edward, Harold's predecessor—was, in proportion to the population of the island, assuredly as great as that which the Sahib logue bear to the indigenous peoples of India. Wherefore, we think that our Optimist must not be too optimistic. Let him turn his attention to the fact that not a little has been done, and the foundation, at least, laid for much more. When we read, on the authority of General Strachey, that the construction of railways alone has been worth forty millions of pounds sterling annually to India, let us at least not cry stale fish, and depreciate—as it is far too much the fashion to do—our own work in that glorious dependency.

With the general scope of our author's conclusions we agree; but he seems to us too much like a boy who wants breakfast, dinner, tea, and supper all rolled into one, and administered—or, as the doctors say, exhibited—all at once. Now this is not in the nature of things. It may—to take a single example—be possible, at no very distant date, to establish some kind of a representation, such as he proposes, of the Natives. But the details would require, as old Peggotty said, "a mort of thought," and would probably have to be worked out in a very different fashion from that suggested by Optimist, who seems too prone to constitution-mongering, and quite forgets his own very true remark that the genius of the Natives "is in many respects the very antithesis" of our own.

Some of the matters advocated by him, such as the "ladies' secular mission" to their Native sisters—in our opinion every English lady in India has great, and, with but few honourable exceptions, neglected, opportunities of usefulness in this direction—have been more than once adverted to by us. The provision of free passages to Native students might seem to render them in a manner the protégés of Government, and its result in this respect would have to be very carefully watched.

The author is a little inconsistent as to the duties of a district officer, as a rule, Heaven knows, not of the lightest. In one place (p. 112) he tells us that his appetite for work is "perfectly insatiable," though, in a previous paper (p. 38), he admonishes us not to "allow him to cry out at any amount of extra work, he must accept his position," &c. Now, our belief is, that the average district officer is a willing and hardworking man, who is ready to do anything in which there is a clear prospect of benefit to the people committed to his charge, that he is, generally speaking, a fair and beneficent ruler. But we are not prepared to deny that he does "cry out" at the endless, and too often useless, reports and returns which he has to prepare, absorbing much time which could far better be devoted to actual administrative work. That the Sahib should as often, as may be, be visible outside his cutcherry, that his face should be known in every village of every pergunnah in his district, that he should habitually administer justice, as far as possible, on the spot, these seem to us the real desiderata, and Optimist would, we are sure, find the necessity for half the paper reforms now so strenuously advocated vanish, were these real defects in our system remedied.

But, be this as it may, the aspirations of Optimist and those who think with him are the same as our own, the welfare of the peoples of India. Our author has written a suggestive book, which well deserves, what it will doubtless receive, the careful attention of all interested in "Reform and Progress in India."

AS IT WAS WRITTEN.†

"Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide," said Dryden, and some modern novelists seem to have taken the hint, and exhausted their ingenuity in depicting the "partitions," the same person being alternately rational and the reverse. The idea (no new one, by the way) has, of late years, been brought into vogue by the unprecedented and well-merited success of the late Mr. Fargus's admirably written "Called Back," of which his next work, "Dark Days," was hardly a worthy successor. In this tale we have the same idea again, the demi-semi maniac being this time one of the sterner sex.

The hero of the book is a young Jew, a born musician, who falls in love at first sight with Veronika, a beautiful young Jewess, a good girl, who supports, by giving music lessons, a half-idiotic uncle. The hero of the tale, while in a state of quasi-madness, kills his beloved, and finds out afterwards that, "as it was written" in his father's will, it was his fate to do so, she being the sole offspring of the man with whom his mother had eloped. After being tried for the crime, and acquitted on the ground of absence of motive, he, while copying some music, again falls into a state analogous to that in which he committed the murder, and instead of music, which he had been asked to write, puts on paper the details of the crime. The entire story, though well enough written, is extravagant in a high degree, being a mere mélange of Erckmann Chatrian's "Polish Jew" and "Called Back." Seriously, we think that this terrain of semi-lunacy has, for the present, at least, been sufficiently exploité, and we advise future authors to beware lest, while groping in the dim border-land which lies between sanity and insanity, they stumble into that which divides sense from nonsense.

LETTS AND CO'S. POPULAR ATLAS.

This Atlas is, this month (Part 9 of the issue), distinguished by containing a really excellent geological map of England. People—and they are not few in number—who are ordered by their medical advisers to avoid certain soils cannot do better than consult it before fixing on their future residence. We notice that in the map of Spain the gulf, or rather bay, into which the Rhone debouches is called the Gulf of Lyon, the second city of France being several scores of miles distant. We speak subject to correction, but not altogether without knowledge, when we suggest that the modern spelling is the Gulf of Lions, and that examinees are required thus to write the name.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—ILLUMINATED EVENING INDOOR FETES.—A few facts with reference to these fêtes, which will for the present take place tri-weekly, on Mondays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, may be interesting. The normal lighting of the building, by about 5,000 ordinary gas-burners, and seventy-five large electric arc lamps, each of a nominal 2,000 candle-power, will be supplemented by 10,000 gas-jets in lamps of various beautiful hues, and 4,000 "bucket" oil lamps. The tinted glass lamps, arranged in festoons and other graceful devices along the girders and at other points of vantage in the building, have been specially manufactured at Stourbridge for the Crystal Palace Company, many of the tints being quite novel. Amongst the most effective of these may be mentioned ruby, sapphire, emerald, canary, opal, opalescent, amber, "oriental," "aurora," &c., &c. The bucket lamps are for the most part arranged in the vases of flowers and amongst the flowering plants, which form an important part of the decorations, for which the company's rich resources in the direction both of nature and art have been largely drawn upon. Statuary, both in groups and in single figures, forms an important element of the decorations. The music will be mainly furnished by military bands, and these will play on an elegant newly-constructed decagonal orchestra in the centre transept. This orchestra alone will be lighted by about 2,000 coloured lamps. The electric arc lamps in the centre will be masked, so to speak, by Chinese lamps encircling them, the object being to add picturesqueness to the general scene, and to prevent the milder lights from being overpowered by the electric light. The great stage which forms the background to the scene has been decorated by Mr. F. Fenton, and represents a semi-oriental interior. This also will be brilliantly lighted. It may be added that the whole has been designed and executed by the company's staff.

INDIAN DELEGATES.

THERE is no rose without a thorn, and there is no improvement which does not entail some kind of inconvenience. If you add a story to your house, if you have the outside painted, or, when of brick, "pointed," if you have the rooms papered, or, worst of all, the drainage "looked to," we do not envy you unless you turn out (which is not done for nothing) for the time being. If you change your residence for the better, you are practically houseless for some days or weeks at least; a hotel, or a "seaside residence," being, not improbably, the alternative.

Every transition state has its inconveniences. The time has not yet arrived when School Boards will have improved the "slut" of old off the face of the earth, and taught maids to discuss "Physiography"—this, whatever it may mean, is one of the new subjects—with their mistresses in French, German, and, probably, Italian. But there has been not a little social friction in many a family owing to the "accomplishments" of the parlour-maid, who can smell a rat or two if you venture to speak at table in any but some recondite language; a good remedy for which would be conversation in Hindustani, a language as yet, we believe, not part of the curriculum of these costly institutions.

As in one, so in all. Parvis componere magna, we have reached a transition state in India, and are bound to experience its inconveniences. We have raised the educational status of the people—especially of those living in the more important towns—beyond all conception; they naturally turn to what is to them the rising—though geographically the setting—sun, and gravitate in constantly increasing numbers towards this country. They find that its internal politics have of late much influenced its course of action in India. The invaluable buffer interposed by John Company between India and politics in England has disappeared; and, unfortunately, it has but too plainly been brought within the ken of ambitious Indians that the working of the British constitution has no element of consistency. Each party is too apt to reverse what has been done by that which preceded it. To Indians it seems like the oscillation of a pendulum, one way one minute, another the next. But they have have had but a few years' experience of its working. To ourselves, who have practical acquaintance with its operation, besides that which historical study affords, it has always seemed to resemble a boat propelled from the stern by a single oar; pointing, indeed, sometimes a little to the one side, then to the other, but yet always making a steady and noticeable progress in the right direction.

That our Indian fellow-subjects should be anxious to give to this progress, so far as India may be concerned, something more than—to borrow Micawber's well-known phrase—a shove of their cold shoulders, is natural, and the aspiration is one to be encouraged.

We have been led to these remarks by the announcement, made within the last few weeks, that Native delegates have been sent hither to represent "the people of India" at the forthcoming elections. We do not, at present, understand that they have any really representative character, or that they represent the "people of India" otherwise than as the three tailors of Tooley-street represented the people of England. The persons who seem chiefly to influence what is, by courtesy, called public opinion in a country where, even now, but a comparatively small minority of the population can read or write, are chiefly Baboos in Bengal, and some of the journalists in Bombay.

There can be no reason why a delegation composed of such men might not be able to act up to their instructions. For, be it remembered, to be a delegate presupposes a delegator.

Now, we know not exactly under what roving commission these "delegates" have come, though it is generally understood that their intention is to advocate the cause of what is known as Liberalism. Most heartily welcome will they be if, irrespectively of English party considerations (but only in this case), they will devote themselves to laying clearly before the electors the points in which they wish for reformed administration. We have possessed India for about 130 years—a very insignificant period in the life of a nation; and we do not think our Government has cause to be ashamed of the results of its administration.

"For India the British conquest was the beginning of peace and justice, which had previously been for ages denied to its down-trodden millions. Englishmen are unable to concede to the spokesmen of Native grievances that a tone of discontent at the fact of foreign rule is in any way justifiable." We cannot jump at once from absolute anarchy, the result of centuries of oppression and of internecine warfare, into the civilization which long-continued stable Government has established in England. Any student of history will see that to expect this would be a delusion, even were the "people of India" homogeneous. The contrary is the case. Great Britain has to rule in India a congeries of races and religions, and only by a figure of speech can India be called a country, and its populations be styled the Indian people.

But the "delegates" do not seem content to urge the interests of India. They appear desirous to allow their support to be given to candidates, not because they know more or less of Indian affairs, but because, in English matters, nowise concerning India, they take a particular side. The side they seem to have adopted is the so-called "Liberal." To us it would be just as objectionable had they thought fit to "patronise" the other party. If they come hither to further the interests of India, and are not, as has been alleged, brought over by "wirepullers," it cannot concern them in what part of the House a man sits who is really desirous of India's welfare. As the Times has well remarked, "Whenever the genuine claims of India are in question Sir Richard Temple and Sir George Campbell would be found in the same lobby."

As Sir T. Madava Rao rightly says, that party is best which does the best for India. We have urged this over and over again. What is wanted is a real interest in Parliament as to Indian affairs. We think that the present Secretary of State for India has done his best to excite this, and, so far, has deserved well of that country. Let us get rid, no matter if with some trouble, of the "discussion" of Indian affairs, at the fag-end of a session, by some half-score sleepy individuals. But, once given, a body of real representatives of the interests of our splendid dependency, we are bound to say that we are not anxious to inquire on which side of the Speaker's chair they sit. We are not careful to answer in this matter.

The most far-sighted Native gentlemen have either held aloof from the movement, or have dissociated themselves from it, simply on the ground that English party politics should be kept, to the utmost possible, at a distance "as far as the East is from the West" from Indian affairs. The two are, indeed, ill-yoked if conjoined. What says the British Indian Association, a Native political body second to none? It unhesitatingly avows its conviction that the Native community of India should not identify themselves with any political party in England. "It also declines to support the appointment of Bombay and Madras delegates to England, because it believes it to be extremely inconvenient to tie the Association to the political opinions of individuals. The president of the Bombay Association has extracted himself from an unenviable position by resigning his membership." Sir J. Jeejeebhoy writes:—

I feel I cannot any longer remain a member of an association which apparently aims at using India and Indian interests for the political purposes of one or other political party in England. To us both parties are, or should be, alike; we have staunch friends, as many among the one as among the other party, and not least among them are, in my opinion, several of the gentlemen gratuitously and objectionably prescribed.

The real gist of the complaints, in whatever form advanced, is that Englishmen are not Indians. But, as a contemporary rightly says, India never has governed itself. There is the strongest evidence from history that foreign rule is an indispensable necessity. It "has been, is, and in all probability is destined to be, a basis for India of such good government as by no other visible medium it could enjoy." Our rule is undoubtedly not perfect; there are spots on the sun. But we are well assured that it is, out and out, the best which India has ever had. "Delegates," if "delegated" by any really representative body, may well ponder the fact, that foreign rule is for India, as all history shows, a foregone conclusion, and may beware lest, by stirring up discontent with the things that be, they be paving the way for any change which may be even less pleasing to them. If Solomon has whips, Rehoboam might conceivably have scorpions.

OBITUARY.

LORD STRATHNAIRN.

Lord Strathnairn, better known to Indian readers as Sir Hugh Rose, who died in Paris on the 16th inst., was no ordinary man, and had the good luck to be placed in prominent positions, both military and diplomatic. He held the very arduous post of Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople, in the absence of the great Eltchi, Sir Stratford Canning, just before the Crimean War, and it was on this requisition that, after the Sinope massacre, the British fleet moved into the Dardanelles. His wonderful march, in command of the Central India Field Force, in 1857-8, will be fresh in the memory of our readers. It was a rare feat. He marched 1,084 miles, took upwards of 150 pieces of artillery, one intrenched camp, one fortified city, one partly intrenched town, and fought sixteen successful actions, captured twenty forts, and never sustained a check. The march involved the relief of Saugor capture of Ratghur, Shahghur, and Chundehree, siege and capture of Jhansi and Calpee, and various other engagements terminating in the storm and capture of Gwalior and restoration of the Maharajah Scindia to his capital. He received the thanks of Parliament. Subsequently he succeeded the late Lord Clyde as Commander-in-Chief in India. In 1865 he returned to England, and then took command of Her Majesty's forces in Ireland, which position he resigned in 1870. In 1869 he was appointed to the command of the Royal Horse Guards. He was raised to the peerage in 1866 as Baron Strathnairn of Strathnairn, in the county of Nairn, and of Jhansi, East Indies. He was advanced to the rank of Field-Marshal in June, 1877. His death leaves vacant the command of the regiment of Horse Guards, and we concur in the opinion of one of our Service contemporaries, that no one has a better claim to succeed him in this position—valued less for its emoluments than for the distinction which it confers on its holder—than Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, who began his career of splendid service seven years before "the only General" was born!

We have received from Mr. Marvin a letter complaining that we have incorrectly stated his argument in the October number of the Army and Navy Magazine as regards Port Hamilton. If, as is possible, considering Mr. Marvin's exceptional facilities for acquiring information from Russian sources, it be the case that Vladivostok is not impregnable, this conflicts with what we have hitherto had good reason to believe to be true; and, were it not for Mr. Marvin's assertion, we should be sceptical that the Russians would have allowed the fact to be known. They are not in the habit of crying stale fish. Far more probable that they are laying a trap by trying to allure a hostile fleet into some impasse. Mr. Marvin further objects to our remark that he seems to regard Vladivostok as in some way a compensation for Herat. Remembering the Russian threat that if we took Port Hamilton they would take Herat, and reading in Mr. Marvin's article that, as Penjdeh is the stepping-stone to Herat, so is Port Hamilton the stepping-stone to Vladivostok, the conclusion was not unnatural that the one place was to be set off against the other, and we are glad to see that this was not the writer's meaning. As, however, Mr. Marvin and we ourselves are working on the same lines, namely, to repel Russian aggression, these matters of detail need not further detain us.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, October 9th; Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, Oct. 7th.

THE correspondent of the Times, telegraphing from Lahore under date Oct. 24, reports in substance as follows:—

The anxiety felt as to the coinciding dates of the Dusserah and the Mohurram has been dispelled by the occurrence of the latter a day later than was expected. At Lahore the danger of collision between the rival religionists was considered so great that troops were brought in from Meean Meer, and every Hindoo shop in the city was closed. These particulars are stated to have been obtained by personal inquiry from official and unofficial sources.

These occurrences show the bitterness of the feeling between the professors of the rival faiths, and how real a cause for anxiety exists in Mahomedan centres. We hear from Hyderabad, a Mahomedan State, that the Hindoos were forbidden to institute processions in the streets.

THE following particulars are given as to the late floods:—

The Distress Relief Committee, whose active exertions on behalf of victims of the inundations will be needed for some months, continues its labours. Its task is lightened by the local relief committees which are now being formed. The populous districts of Dacca and Furidpur escaped damage from the floods. In the northern portions some tracts were submerged, but the people are beginning to return to their fields. Those in the inundated portions of the Pergunnahs are more chary of doing so, as the ground continues wet and unworkable. In Nuddea the people are settling down quietly. Hopes are entertained that the rubbee crops will completely relieve the distress in that district. It is still found difficult to estimate the amount of the damage done.

The accounts of the recent cyclone on the Orissa coast are coming in slowly. The loss of life and property appears to have been appalling. The Commissioner, Mr. Metcalfe, was at once on the spot. 400 square miles of rice land were covered with sea-water. All the crops, and the whole of the villages, were destroyed. The Commissioner, in his official account, describes the trees, clumps of bamboos, houses, and patches of cultivation as utterly destroyed. Huge trees lie overturned and leafless, with broken branches, looking as if scorched; houses are crushed into one confused mass, and the stench of corpses is dreadful. The Collector of Balasore says that a coast canal would form an effectual barrier between such a wave and the cultivation of the eastern side of the district.

The Fund Committee, in a communication lately published, says of this calamity:—

"It evidently is one of which this generation has had, happily, no experience. It surpasses in its horrors even the destruction wrought by the tidal wave of the cyclone of 1864, in the reaches of the Hooghly."

It is announced that the Lieutenant-Governor will visit Orissa next month.

A VERY significant "straw" thrown up, to be blown hither or yonder as our elections may chance to go! Reuter tells us from Teheran that a letter from Merv, dated October 5th, states that a deputation had arrived there from Maimaneh, complaining of Afghan oppression, and begging for the intervention of the Russian authorities.

WE further learn that the Russian Ministry of Finance contemplates sending out a commission to Central Asia next spring, for the purpose of studying the questions of commercial relations and communications there.

THE Lahore correspondent of the same paper telegraphs on the 24th:—

Information has been received that the Siamese Government has completed the telegraph line from Bangkok to Rahung. Good news for Mr. Colquhoun!

IN speaking, on Friday, at Birmingham, Lord R. Churchill expressed himself with commendable frankness about Burma, wisely laying stress on the importance of the output in Further Asia, for British manufactures, as at least one means of relieving the present distress.

If (he said) you applied to Upper Burma the policy of the late Government with regard to Egypt, the result would surely happen that your industries would be arrested and the development of that dependency would be stopped. I want to know whether the arresting of British trade with Burma and the stoppage of all development of British Burma would revive British trade or give employment to the unemployed. ("No.") On the other hand, a firm and resolute policy applied to Burma will not only protect existing British interests, but may, if it is wisely guided, wisely persevered in, and not interrupted, offer such an extraordinary development to British manufacturers that it is possible there are many in this hall who may live to see the day when British commerce will be again enjoying those leaps and those bounds which Mr. Gladstone some years ago was so eloquent about. (Cheers.)

THE St. James's Gazette well remarks that:—

We certainly had a reputation for action rather than words eighty years ago. Results in almost every case justified this energy. Lord Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchill, in dealing with King Theebaw, have saved useless labour in parleying. . . It is impossible not to feel that in the hands of Mr. Gladstone King Theebaw might have become another Zulfiar. His Majesty had scarcely tampered with British interests before an expedition was openly talked of in the bazaar of Calcutta. This is as it should be; and the spirit which has animated Lord Randolph Churchill's conduct of the Burmese question might very well become an abiding force at the India Office.

The same spirit has actuated the present Government (as shown in our leader of to-day) in dealing with Russia. The result may be seen in the subjoined remarks of the Statist.

THAT journal tells us that the foreign policy of the present Government is held in the City to contrast so favourably for British interests with that which preceded it as to have effected, as regards the coming elections, a great difference in the betting by which chances are usually determined in that centre of speculation. It used to be five to one, it is now only two to one, against a Conservative majority. Well done, Lord Salisbury!

THERE is, according to the Pioneer, at length a chance of the fortifications of Herat being duly supplied with ordnance, the Ameer being urgent in his orders on this subject. Some guns have already been forwarded, "but the transport difficulty will still prevent the train being sent on in a body." The sooner this is done the better; it is, as our contemporary observes, high time that the guns should be forthcoming.

LORD RIPON stated some time since that he had always advocated the retention by us of Pishin. His Despatch as Viceroy, dated 2nd of February, 1881, has been conveniently excluded from the Blue Book. Perhaps the present Government will publish it. We do not think that it will much help the case of the would-be Duke. For the Secretary of State, in acknowledging it, on the 27th April, 1881, distinctly states that Lord Ripon accepted "in principle the severance of our political connection with Pishin and Sibi" whenever circumstances might permit.

A DECISION which may be of great value to the widow-marriage associations has recently been given by the High Court of Bombay. A man who had married a girl of eleven, and had lived apart from her, without consummating the marriage for eleven years, sued for what, in English terminology, would be restitution of conjugal rights. The awkwardness of grafting English marriage laws on Hindoo customs has given rise to a good deal of difficulty, and even of hardship. The Pioneer, to which journal we owe the details of the case, states that the Judge (Pinhey) "was fortunately unable to discover an English case where restitution of conjugal rights was decreed after a period of years to a petitioner whose marriage was never consummated." Are we to understand that, had such a case been found, this young woman of twenty-two would have been sentenced to pass the remainder of her existence with a man whom she had married when a mere child, and who had not cared to see her face for nearly a dozen years? All honour to Mr. Justice Pinhey. As a contemporary says, it is not every Judge who would venture, "by the exercise of a little firmness and common sense, to do more for the amelioration of the wretched condition of Indian womanhood than has yet been accomplished." Yet it seems to have been a mere accident that there was not some "decision" promulgated in this country, and wholly inapplicable to the state of society existing in India, which would have brought about the deplorable result of placing the poor girl at the disposal of her, as yet nominal, husband. It is high time that English precedents, made probably by hair-splitting special pleaders promoted to the Bench, should not be considered necessarily applicable to India. Here is a real object for Indian "reformers." But, because it is so real, we hear scarce aught about it.

SATISFACTORY as it is that we are to make our man in Kashmir Resident in reality as well as in name—a change which we have so often urged that we were beginning to despair of seeing it made—we are surprised that the hoisting of the symbol of Her Majesty's authority at the Residency should, as in Kashmir, be allowed to be objected to by any tributary State. This is one of the cases in which we may as well take the matter into our hands by simply hoisting the said emblem. We know of no treaty (nor does the Pioneer, in mentioning the matter, refer to one) which prevents our doing this.

SAYS the Sindh Times :—

Maharaja Dhuleep Singh is coming out to India after all. His Highness, with his family, has taken passages to India, and will leave England in October. The son and heir of Ranjeet Singh comes among us as an utter stranger. What irony of fate—what a story is this of Dhuleep Singh's life! We hope Government will let him go to Lahore—the unknown stranger need not be feared. Lahore is one of the most loyal cities in India, and Government need fear nothing from the appearance of Dhuleep Singh in the midst of the Sikhs. Let the son, accompanied by his wife, go as a pilgrim to the marble tomb of his illustrious father. Let him stand before the dust of Ranjeet Singh, and let him think in secret and sorrow of what he might have been. It would be generous on the part of Government, and the risk would be nothing.

THE Army and Navy Gazette of last Saturday contains some well-told reminiscences of Lord Strathnairn, which cannot fail to interest our readers, and a letter in the same journal from "One who served under him" gives a vivid description of the difficulties under which his marvellous march through Central India in 1857-8 was carried out. The troops, it will be remembered, were not allowed to receive the handsome pecuniary recognition of their all but unparalleled hardships, which Sindia was, on his reinstatement on the throne, anxious to bestow on them. Nor would the Government of the day permit them to accept at the chief's hands even a star with his badge. Well may it be said "Had such a feat been performed in these times, orders, crosses, and titles would have been showered."

THE intention to lay a light tramway from Mach to Quetta and through the Pishin Valley has, it is stated, been given up, the difficulty of getting and transmitting the materials being alleged as the reason. We can but hope that the construction of the railway itself will be prosecuted with all the greater vigour.

THE Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the Indian Government apparently anticipates an unfavourable reply from Mandalay to the ultimatum, and is preparing for immediate action. It has arranged with the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company of the transport of the troops to Mandalay. The steamers and flats will make admirable floating barracks. No. 4 Hazara battery has received orders to start for Burma. The force will sail at once. It will consist of 10,000 men, and will be under the command of Major-General Prendergast.

M. FRANCIS CHARMES contributes to Friday's Débats an article which illustrates the unpleasant feeling excited almost universally in Paris by the suggestion of action by Great Britain against Burma. He observes :—

Our interest is the maintenance of Burmese independence. We do not menace it, but we make it a point that it shall not be menaced by others. Burma must remain neutral ground between our possessions and those of England. If such should not be the case, conflicts of influence would soon arise to the east of the Indian Empire, as they already exist to the west of it, and no one would be the gainer thereby. This is what should be understood in London. It would be a mistake to suppose that the public powers in France are about to turn their attention from what goes on outside our frontiers. More than once we have seen a Chamber collectively repudiating the electioneering platitudes uttered by its members individually. What is certain is, that the annexation of Burma, no matter under what form it may be disguised, would be, on the part of England, an act all the more offensive, as we have done nothing to provoke it. The British Government, to whom we have of late given such repeated proofs of friendship, will surely reflect before going further.

What imparts additional importance to this article (the Standard's correspondent says) is the fact that it must be regarded as conveying the views entertained by the French Government. We have had enough and to spare of buffers and "neutral ground."

THE Delhi Gazette informs its fair readers that some samples of wild silk, prepared in British Burma, have been pronounced by English manufacturers superior to both Chinese and Indian tussor silks. A further supply is shortly to be submitted for the opinions of some of the leading Continental firms.

READERS may ponder. Are we as strict as to fortresses either in England or in India?—

GERMAN MILITARY DISCIPLINE.—A Boulogne correspondent writes :—"Last week, as a German infantry officer was walking in civilian attire, over a portion of the Metz fortifications, which the public are forbidden to approach, he received the challenge of a soldier on duty. As he took no notice of the warning the sentry fired, and the officer fell dead on the spot."

WE hope that the attention of the Government continues to be fixed on the gradual absorption, by German houses, of the commerce of Zanzibar. It will not help us in India if our Native merchants find that we stand aside in such a matter, without saying a word in favour of a Sultan who has been faithful to us, or taking one step to protect the interests of our subjects :—

The Hamburg correspondent of the Mouvement Géographique predicts that the safe and deep port of Dar-es-Salaam, which the Sultan of Zanzibar has ceded to Germany, will, owing to its advantageous situation, attract the caravans and absorb the whole traffic of Zanzibar.

The correspondent adds that, as the Sultan will now lose the whole of his revenue, which he derived exclusively from the Customs, he will be finally obliged to place his possessions under the protectorate of Germany.

THE Indian Mirror says :—

The old days, when the Natives who visited and resided in England, were few, are fast passing away. The number of such of our countrymen is largely and rapidly on the increase. Surely India, from her many provinces and out of her many races, can easily supply a few perfectly competent gentlemen to fill seats in the India Council, where they could really be of great practical assistance and service to the Secretary of State. It is well-known that France allows to her native subjects in her limited Indian settlements to nominate men of their own choice to represent them in the Chamber of Deputies in Paris—a body corresponding to the British House of Commons. It is a shame and a reproach to England, the boasted land of liberty and justice, that she should be still withholding the same privilege from her own Native subjects, who form so large a proportion of the whole population of the earth. But she can hardly persist still in the same course either with due regard to her own true interests or compatibly with her duty to this country. A Parliamentary inquiry into Indian affairs will bring to light the gross defects of the present system of Government, and assist the British Legislature to make such changes and improvements in it as are necessary. It was at one time seriously thought that the elective principle might be introduced into the India Council, but the idea was afterwards abandoned, as it afforded no ground to work upon. One part of it was to entrust the duty of election to the English electoral body! If the India Council is still allowed to exist its whole constitution should be changed, and a larger Native element should be introduced into it on the elective principle, each province of India being allowed to be represented in it. India is so vast a country, and contains so many various races.

Chit Chat.

SIERRA LEONE must be a nice place for Europeans. If a pale-face thoughtlessly calls a negro a "nigger," the latter at once summons his traducer, who is generally mulcted in a penalty of £5 for using abusive language. Yet as regards the poor "Englisher," while alive he is invariably designated "a white hound," while when he is called to his long account some black-faced passer-by is pretty certain to greet the cortège with the Christian exclamation, "Dere goes another white beggar to his grave. I wish they would all go to —, and leave the colony to ourselves."

"QUI VA LA," cried a gendarme. "Hé," exclaimed an Englishman, well up in French. "Où est votre lanterne," says the man of the Republic. "Il est sorti," responded the refugee from Anglia's shore. This latter phrase was certainly a somewhat free translation of "it has gone out."

AN interesting discovery has been made in Bombay that "boys will be boys," and a huge controversy is raging on the subject.

DARJEELING is perplexed. They have had only 113 inches of rain at present, or, in a few weeks, about four times as much as falls in England in a year, and the people are wondering what occasions the drought!

THE ladies of Murree have disgusted the gentlemen by dressing their "jampan" bearers in "jharran" suits. What on earth does it all mean?

THE late Babu Sen Nath Sen of Krishnagar is described as a "brilliant old senior scholar." Yet when he died he was but fifty-eight years of age.

FOUR High Court Judges are now on their way from India to England. Yet what is the High Court doing in the interim?

TECHNICAL precision has its advantages. What, for instance, can be understood from a slipshod description of a flower alleged to be "a big blue thing, with a yellow lump in the centre, and with very curiously-shaped leaves?"

THE High Court of Bombay are inexorable in their crusade against railway officials. This time it is an unfortunate Parsee engine-driver who has been trounced. The public is beginning to get alarmed, wondering where the drama will end.

"SAVE me from my friends" is a cry which even an ex-Viceroy may utter. Lord Ripon, said Mr. W. W. Hunter at a meeting of the Simla Art Society, "predicted" that it would be fortunate "if Lord Dufferin were to be the successor who would open the next Exhibition, and it is naively added, the "prediction has been happily fulfilled." The learned orator seems to have forgotten that some weeks before the "prediction" was uttered it had been announced in Council that the last-mentioned nobleman had been selected as the future Viceroy of India. "Never predict till you know" seems, according to Mr. Hunter, the motto of the recently retired representative of the Queen in the land of Ind.

INEQUALITIES are wrong, therefore they must be remedied; such is a prominent political creed. Perhaps the authors of the new-fangled notion will enlighten the world as to how they would put matters right in India at the present moment, when Bengal is suffering from excess of rain, while in the westward Mysore is in the agonies of a drought. Nature teems with such vagaries; but, perhaps, theory soars above Nature.

THE Calcutta Municipality have for years been at issue with the Local Government of Bengal as to the sanitary condition of the City of Palaces. What is the charge against the offending board? The Pioneer sums it up thus: "It is contended that preventible disease existed in Calcutta to a deplorable extent; that the causes of that disease were to be found in the filthy and unsanitary conditions of large portions of the city, especially the 'bastis,' in the inadequate supply of pure drinking water in the poorer parts; to the foul tanks and wells to which large classes were obliged to resort; to sewage-clogged and pestilential drains, frequently in immediate connection with houses and kitchens; or generally defective conservancy and supervision." Forsooth! a pretty "bill of fare." The Government of India have now expressed their views on the merits of the charge. One sentence alone will suffice to indicate what Lord Dufferin thinks of a set of men who abhor bad drains, bad drains, bad smells, bad diseases, and bad management: "The Government will not lightly interfere with the independence of local boards, but it is bound to see that the health of the community is not sacrificed to a short-sighted and misplaced economy." "Thank God, we have a Viceroy!" will be the exclamation of everyone whom duty or pleasure leads to the capital of India, which at length bids fair to become sweet, wholesome, and fit for human beings to inhabit.

THE Pioneer considers that Mr. Grant Duff is probably the only Englishman out of Bedlam who for years past has honestly held to the opinion that the alarm of Russian aggression is a vulgar bugbear. How can this be, for, according to the same paper, one other Englishman did agree with him, and, unfortunately, acted upon his belief. That one was Lord Ripon, Governor-General of India. The result is matter of history.

IN England the postcard is used for every eight or nine letters, but in India the proportion is but one to four. The reason is obvious. An Englishman looks upon it as a sort of affront to receive the humble substitute for an epistle. The Native, on the other hand, has not yet been educated to such a pitch of refinement.

SIMLA has an epidemic of "whooping-cough." So all juvenile balls and other infantile amusements are at an end.

At the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition the subject of one of the pictures which won a prize was a young lady strolling in evening dress, and without a hat or parasol, in a sunny field. If the original fair charmer had done such a mad prank there would ere long have been a case for the doctors. A tropical sun resents such liberties. To add to the peculiarity of the verdict, "the pupil of one eye is said to be somewhat elongated." What could the judges have been doing?

ON the south-western shores of India there is a small Native State known as Cochin, which, amongst other peculiarities, can show black Jews and white Jews side by side in its streets.

A GENTLEMAN of high birth, the son of a colonel in the Guards, chanced to be travelling in the East, dependent on remittances from England. On one occasion they were delayed, with the result that the unfortunate wanderer could not pay his hotel bill, and was accordingly prosecuted as a thief and swindler!

THE Russians are accomplished actors. Mr. Finn's servant, who was imprisoned, tells a story of an officer of the Czar's army who left the room while a poor wretch was being flogged by his orders! The same authority tells that the civilisation of the Turkomans is proceeding apace. But how? "In Geok-tepeh there are six shops for the sale of liquor kept by Armenians." Well may he add, with naïve simplicity, "Liquor shops seem to spring up quickly wherever Russian soldiers are collected."

A GREAT deal has been written about the remarriage of Hindu widows, and the subject is worthy of the best attention of philanthropists. This is the picture drawn by a Hindu lady of the condition of a luckless wife who has lost her husband:—"No sooner does a Hindu woman, be she fifteen or fifty, lose her husband, than the persecution of custom begins. The fair locks, which are universally regarded as one of the choicest gifts of nature, and for the graceful rearing of which art has been contriving means in every civilised country, these locks, the pride of young women, are ruthlessly sheared clean off at the instigation of the butcher priest. In this matter the feelings of the unfortunate victim are of no count, and her piteous protests are usually rudely ignored. From this moment she is the incarnation of all that is unlucky and inauspicious. Her presence is skunned. She is a leper of society, doomed to pass her life in seclusion, and not allowed to mix freely with her people. If the unfortunate creature unwittingly intrudes her odious presence on any occasion of joy or festivity, the company curses her presence, and regard it as an evil omen, sure to be followed by some great calamity. Be it known that to this company, which curses her very existence, is mostly composed of her dear and near relatives. If an orthodox Hindoo starts on an enterprise, but, as ill luck would have it, decries a poor widow on the road, he curses her to the fourth generation, laments his unfortunate lot, and prays his 330 millions of gods to avert the certain misfortune which this evil omen portends." This, and much more in the same strain, is the melancholy tale of human misery and suffering which is poured into the ears of the astonished West. Cannot something be done to put an end to a reign of terror which frequently leads its victim to a self-inflicted death? Surely there is ample scope in this direction for the energy of a Wilberforce or the zeal of a Fry?

COLONEL FRASER has doubtless reason to remember the "good old days of yore," for, when first posted to a regiment at Bombay, he found the rooms assigned to him occupied by parroquets, dogs, a litter of pups, two monkeys, and a baboon. But the picture has a reverse side. How the mouth waters on reading the description of a rupee as "a coin current all over India, and worth about 2s. 3d. sterling." Now its value is about 1s. 6d.!

At the common jail in Bombay the hospital assistant accidentally administered to some prisoners a dose of strychnine in place of cinchona alkaloid. The result was, in a pecuniary point of view, gratifying; four of the unfortunate sufferers died within half-an-hour. The explanation of the mistake makes one's hair stand on end. The fever mixture and the deadly poison were kept in the same drawer.

In India, instead of the time-honoured phraseology, "The Queen versus —," we read the "Imperatrix."

In Madras a Native recently put up his wife to auction; but evidently the public did not appreciate her charms, for the highest bid was about, in English money, half-a-farthing! Yet the husband did not "buy her in."

JAPAN grows a greater variety of leguminous plants for food than any country in the world. For instance, there are no less than 250 different species of rice cultivated.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE RUSSIAN REVOLT.*

We cannot help thinking the title of this very interesting book a misnomer. For some time past Russian revolt has seemed dead; and, unless it be resuscitated in a Pickwickian sense—that is, in a sphere of activity less germane to powder and dynamite than to pens, ink, and paper—it may be doubted whether we shall at present hear much more of it. Moreover, much of Mr. Noble's work touches less on the revolt than on the history of the various steps by which Russia has reached its present state of marvellous, we may say of overgrown, territorial development. The Empire has of late shown activity more in the extremities than, so far as can be judged by anyone not resident in the country, in the heart; and has doubtless called to the memory of many a reader Palmerston's saying, recorded in the veracious pages of Punch, that he could not back the Rooshian, because he had no Constitution.

Nevertheless, many facts mentioned by Mr. Noble, and which have led up to the "Revolt," may well claim careful consideration.

The world was, "once on a time," supposed to be supported by Mount Atlas, and, on further inquiry, it turned out that Atlas and his burden were supported by a tortoise whose favourite abode was somewhere away in the western ocean. There was, indeed, one audacious individual—we should imagine, an ancestor of the celebrated "potwalloping Sadducee"—who emboldened himself to ask on what the tortoise rested. It is needless to observe that this blasphemous speculator never had a reply: people who inquire too far never get into anything but fog.

Now, we will not undertake to say that Mr. Noble has landed us in fog, or that he has gone too far back in his inquiries, but he certainly has, like the unbeliever who wanted to go further than the tortoise, begun ab initio.

The Tartar, or Tatar, origin of the Russians we will be content to accept, if on no better ground, on the authority of Napoleon's well-known dictum. But we cannot help thinking that Mr. Noble lays, as regards this matter, undue stress on peculiarities by no means confined to the Empire of the Great White Tsar, though, like all mankind, they may have come from Eothen, the land of the rising sun. For instance, Mr. Noble thinks it (p. 24) "noteworthy" that a wife unfaithful to her husband is said to "walk away." Has Mr. Noble never heard of a married lady "running away with a Plunger?" Perhaps they have no Plungers in Russia. We are ahead of them. Our naughty women "run" away, theirs only "walk." Again (p. 32), the habit of expectorating as a means of expressing disgust or abhorrence—why Mr. Noble connects this with the drinking of tea we are unable to perceive—is common enough in Europe. In the Potteries, and the South of England, it is an habitual indication of disgust; and it is thought at least disrespectful to spit even accidentally as a person passes; nor will anyone need to be told the meaning, as applied to an individual, or "cracher" in France. Following the same line of thought, we are unable to see anything specially characteristic in "John Orlov's Peter" (p. 29). How often has one not heard "Our Tom's Mary."

One thing anyone who wishes encouragement to learn Russian should note; and, as special inducements to try conclusions with that formidable language have been offered to Indian officers, we are glad to call their attention to it. There are but thirteen irregular verbs! Now, in French—as we all know to our cost—there are 72, in German 217 (besides all those which are taken to pieces, and put, half at the beginning, the other half at the end, of a phrase), and in Italian 514. But there is another side to the shield. One used to be told at school that there were 1,100 odd inflexions in a Greek verb. Here is something hardly less promising:—"For a learner to use accurately a Russian verb, he must (p. 28) first decide whether he wishes to express completed action, incomplete action, single action, plurality of action, single perfect action, or commencing action."

Apply this, O fair reader, to the verb "to love." We have no motive in selecting this particular vocable, except that every grammar, in every language, intuitively "goes in for it." Who can imagine what a task it would be to "decide" which particular form it may be the "correct thing" to use? What an endless variety of might be, would be, could be, and, above all, should be!

So much for the language, which is worth considering only in so far as it may be supposed to give any indication of the tendencies (inseparable from the language) of the people. As regards these, there is, unfortunately, little reason to believe that the Russian nation has materially changed for the better since the days of heathendom. The pictures in the places of worship may nominally represent saints, instead of (more or less) corresponding heathen deities, just as in the North of Spain, where—so says Ford—the whole worship of the people has been transferred from Ashtaroth (the Phœnician Venus) to the Virgin Mary, and whose Sunday is called Dia di Astarte. The masses of the Russian people seem to be scarcely less heathenish than of yore.

The change from the original Slav village, to the Imperial, system, is attributed by the author to the action of the Church, or, as he calls it, Byzantinism. "The political influence wielded . . . by the Greek Church was one antagonistic to Slav methods of public life and government. The national system had the freedom of the individual as its foundation. The organisation . . . was that of the rod, the tribe or family on a large scale . . . a purely democratic form of government . . . which the Greek Church attacked at its very foundation," the ideal of the priests of that fearfully corrupt Church being, "that the individual should count as nothing, and the ruler as the be-all and end-all of the new state."

Our author seems to regard the influence of the Greek—so-called—Christianity as having been far from beneficial to Russia. Our own Puritans gave us a taste of ostentatious asceticism. But the Greek priests appear to have out-Cromwelled Cromwell when they "condemned (p. 96) music and musical instruments of all kinds; even laughing was a sin. For a single member of the household to commit the crime of dancing or singing was to prepare the whole family for eternal torments in hell." No wonder that such teaching plunged the Russian deeper than before into the mire of hypocrisy into which all Oriental nations are but too ready to sink.

The worst social evil which this travesty of a Christian Church inflicted on the people was its treatment of women. Woman, per se, was (p. 113) an evil. Up to the 11th and 12th centuries, the Slav women were treated with the highest deference. What is to be thought of Mr. Gladstone's favourite Greek Church, which debases women, whom heathen Slavs respected, and whom to raise is of the essence of Christianity?

It would be well worth while, though it might be difficult, to trace the various steps by which the village life of the Slavs, so closely akin to that of the Hindoos, and—so far as Tacitus can be relied on—to that of the Germans of Cæsar's and Agrippa's times, was changed into the subjection of the population to one of the most brutal and unreasoning despotisms which the world has ever beheld. Sæpniak has given facts—Mr. Noble has given facts; but these are, to use Coleridge's admirable simile, "like marbles in a bag; they touch, but do not adhere." We do not remember to have seen in either book a really thoughtful attempt to "fathom the ultimate causes" of this very momentous change.

Mr. Noble has evidently a musical ear, and tries to "make a point" of the fact that most Russian melodies are in the minor key, forgetting, apparently, how many English, and Scotch, songs affect it. Yet the minor is surely the natural expression of so many of the deepest sentiments of our nature, common to all races, that we can hardly be surprised to find it everywhere.

The political feeling of discontent with the existing Government which is, everywhere, the basis of revolt, is, in Russia, intensified by the universal and unutterable corruption of the official class—a corruption so widely spread, that Nicholas I. said that there was not an honest man in his dominions save himself and his heir-apparent. Nor has this corruption been checked by later rulers, it being well known that the Grand Duke in command of the Russian forces in the late Russo-Turkish War cleared millions by drawing pay for soldiers who had never existed, and by starving those who had the misfortune to be under his command. Let us see how this discontent, most righteous in itself, presented itself to the world.

It seems to be the tendency of Continental races to spend any amount of time in discussing what they are pleased to call "first principles," "les droits de l'homme." Before these are settled, a very considerable number of "humans" have been deprived of the chance of possessing, on this side the grave, any rights whatever. There is a revolution, or a pronunciamiento, or what not: some hundreds are shot down, and their chance of participating in the benefits of some spick-and-span new Constitution is gone for ever. We, in the right little, tight little, island, have proceeded on a better system; we took our rights first, and defined them afterwards. We have not been "careful to answer in this matter." When Abbot threatened, as Speaker, to "name" an impulsive Irish member, the delinquent asked him, "And what might happen, Mr. Spaker, if ye did name me?" "Heaven only knows!" was Abbot's reply, carefully guarding his rights, while leaving their extent discreetly undefined. Abroad, you will generally have to prove your own existence as a preliminary to proposing any single political notion. Here is as good a specimen of this sort of thing as one might wish to see (almost as good as the old schoolmen's puzzle—"what would be the result if an irresistible force came into contact with an immovable body?" and certainly not less perplexing): "Is a logical transition possible, without gap or obstacle, from pure Being through nothing to Becoming and existence?" Yet this "thesis" seems to have been a matter of debate among the Russian Nihilists!

Now, if the future of Russia were to depend on individuals who can write, or on bodies who can seriously discuss, this kind of rubbish, we could not say that we should think much of the prospects of the Russian revolt against the despotism, tempered by assassination, which now forms the Government of that unhappy country. Ivan the Terrible would be almost preferable to a Government of ideologues. But there seems reason to believe that a good deal of this trash proceeds from that land of unmeaning verbiage, France, and is absorbed by, without leavening, the partizans of revolt.

What may be the prospects of a revolutionary movement which, if for the moment scotched, is assuredly not killed, it is not our purpose to inquire. Nothing is so certain as the unforeseen; yet, though it will, in all probability, be through oceans of blood that Russia will wade to a true civilization and a true Christianity, this volume shows that the heaven is at work, and gives some hope that the desired result may eventually be attained.

THE LIGHT OF ASIA AND THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.*

The appearance of Mr. Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia" has had a marked effect in increasing the interest felt in the religion of Buddha. Nor need this circumstance occasion wonder. The faith which can muster at its shrine no less than 400 millions of worshippers—one-third of the human family—must have some attractions. Admittedly in this age the "deification of majorities" is fashionable, seeing that the desire that man should be his own God is an enticing faith, which drags multitudes of thoughtless persons in its train; but, making every allowance for the whim of the hour, Buddhism is in favour in this land. Why? Let us try and analyse the matter. First, as to the founder of the creed. About 500 or 600 years before Christ there was born of an Aryan parent the Raja or ruler of a village 100 miles north of Benares, a youth named "Gautama." Seven days after his birth his mother, the Rani Maya, then in her forty-fifth year, died, and his maternal aunt took the place of a foster-mother to the orphaned child. When twenty-nine years had elapsed the stripling married his cousin, the beautiful Yasodhara, the offspring of the union being one son. After a while, Gautama, impressed with the greatness and universality of human misery, determined to renounce home, wife, child, kingdom, and all, to give himself up to the work of solving, if possible, this mystery of sorrow, and discovering some way for its mitigation or removal. First of all he resorted to teachers, but they were powerless to help him, so he took to a life of most merciless and long-continued penance, but the secret was no nearer at hand than before. Soon after this came the last decisive struggle, in which, as is alleged, he solved the enigma of life, made an end of pain, and therewith obtained the power to point that way to others. Henceforth Gautama became Buddha, or the "Enlightened One," the founder of the faith to which he gave his name.

What is the religion which he proclaimed? It may be described briefly as a species of moral asceticism, all the passions and feelings of the human heart being brought into such subjection that the Powers of Evil are powerless to assault the happy devotee who has attained "Nirvana," which latter is the aim and object of every true and faithful follower of Buddha. A superficial glance at the doctrines and legends of this faith tends to the theory that it has much in common with the tenets of Christianity, a circumstance which, coupled with the undoubtedly noble moral precepts which its founder inculcated, goes far perhaps to account for the interest exhibited in the West as regards a religion so largely professed in the East. The object of Mr. Kellogg's book is to prove the fallacy of any such fancies, by examining the two religions critically, and showing how totally at variance the one is to the other—how utterly the meek spirit of the one is absent from the self-satisfied egotism of the other.

It would be impossible within any reasonable limits to examine exhaustively the many overwhelming arguments, the endless deductive inferences, the unanswerable logic with which Mr. Kellogg's book teems at every turn; it must suffice to glance cursorily at some of his main arguments, leaving the reader to gather from a perusal of the book the masterly mode in which facts are marshalled and fallacies exposed. Alone amongst the religions of the world, says our author, Christianity appeals to history: the facts upon which it bases its claim to acceptance are contemporaneous with the alleged events; it is a creed which challenges criticism and courts investigation. With Buddhism the case is the exact reverse: "it appeals," writes Mr. Kellogg, "to no historical facts in support of any of its stupendous assertions; it asks that men believe all on the simple word of this Buddha." Yet it is not known even approximately when he lived; there can be no possibility of an appeal to history in such circumstances, and the "fog of obscurity" must remain to the end of time undispersed and undispersable. Then, again, as to the legends of Buddha as to his temptations, his triumph, his fasts, his miracles, admitting that there is in all this a striking resemblance to the Gospel stories, not a tittle of what is handed down can be traced back to the time when the "Enlightened One" was wont to sit under the "Bo" tree. If one religion borrowed from the other, the probability is that Christianity first promulgated the ideas which in after years became embodied in the faith of Buddha, while too many of the coincidences are imaginary, and disappear upon a close examination of the facts of the case.

As regards doctrines, the two creeds are as wide apart as the poles. One "tells man that even the necessary judgments of his mind cannot be trusted; that his conviction of his own personality and of his possession of a soul is a delusion; that his noblest desires—especially that after everlasting life and a blessed immortality beyond the grave—are doomed to an eternal disappointment." With Buddhism there is no God, no hope, no redemption, no Saviour; nay, more, it teaches that man needs nought; his own efforts are sufficient to lead him to the goal of "Nirvana," to attain which he must "stifle all his holiest inborn affections and his natural longings for eternal love and immortality, destroy the home, and trample under foot all the highest and most sacred obligations of life." Christianity, on the contrary, is a religion teaching mankind to believe in a God of infinite wisdom and love, "the Creator and Omnipotent Ruler of heaven and earth": it inculcates the immortality of the soul—it proclaims redemption, and heralds forth salvation. If this be light, Buddhism is, in verity and truth, impenetrable darkness.

Then as to the system of morals—the strongest point in the "Light of Asia"—admitting that Buddha insisted upon chastity, humanity, kindness, charity, and peace, the basis on which he rears the fabric of religious duty is unsound, his laws are defiant of the very consciousness of man, good is confounded with evil, virtues are distorted into vices, indifference is paraded as tolerance; in short, it is the very embodiment of selfishness—a cold, heartless, unsympathetic creed, of the earth earthy. Compare this with Christianity, think of its noble conceptions, its tenderness, its charity—compare, too, the results: in the one case there is asceticism mingled with the grossest sensuality; side by side regard for animal life combined with the utmost indifference to the wants and sufferings of fellow-creatures on this earth; there is narrowness of mind mingled with pitiful arrogance and self-satisfied presumption. In the other case we find that the creed of the Christian has "elevated woman, it has ennobled man, it has developed the intellect and purified the affections." It has produced in rich abundance the noblest fruits of righteousness, and peace, and unselfish love, alike from the dry wastes of philosophical infidelity and the malarious marshes of materialism and sensuality. It has created that supreme earthly blessing, the Christian home; in the State it alone has given whatever of true liberty man has as yet attained."

From all this argument Mr. Kellogg adduces two corollaries of "the highest consequence." First, that it is folly or ignorance to assert that Buddhism and Christianity are derived from one and the same source of Infinite Wisdom; for, as regards essentials, the two creeds are so widely divergent that both could not possibly have been delivered to man for his belief. Secondly, it is contended that "if Christianity presents a true system of doctrine and morals," then Buddhism is a false religion; if one be "light," the other is "darkness."

It is seldom that a writer—and still more seldom that a clerical author—presents his arguments in such a cogent form as is the case in Mr. Kellogg's work. He never, too, shirks a difficulty, or shrinks from a contest. Hence it is difficult to gainsay his conclusions, or to resist his deductions. The volume merits, and will doubtless receive, careful consideration at the hands of all those who value truth, and who see, in the present freedom of thought, not an enlargement and increase of religious fervour and piety, but a longing after liberty and a thirst for deliverance from the restraints of a religion which, while it ennobleth humanity, puts a check upon the unbridled passions of our fallen race. To such persons Buddhism is palatable; it leads them to be their own God; it inculcates high aspirations which, to appearance, are calculated to satisfy the longings of the soul after higher things, but which in reality lead to nought, and leave bareness and desolation in the inward heart. This is the faith which Mr. Kellogg exposes with merciless severity. And he has done right good service to the cause of Christianity in this our, as yet, Christian land.

THE LAST AFGHAN BLUE BOOK.

WE are glad at length to receive some intimation of what the present Government has been doing as to Afghan frontier matters. We had occasion, not long since, to refer in terms assuredly not too severe, to the characteristic ineptitude evinced by the late Cabinet in these, as in all other foreign matters, and it is satisfactory to perceive from the moment the present Administration took office, a manner of speech widely differing from the inane feebleness of Lord Granville. It is no longer "how far will you let us go?" but how far is it wise for us to allow you to go?

Yet the negotiators on our side were very heavily handicapped by the concessions already made by the weakness of their predecessors; and, though the latter part of the Blue Book (which contains 100 documents, ranging from February 7 to September 17) is less unpleasant reading than the former, the return cannot, as a whole, be looked on with pride by any one who patriotically values British reputation for safeguarding the country's interests, or for good faith.

The mischief done may be gathered from Sir P. Lumsden's remark (p. 69), "My opinion has in no way changed that, strategically, there is no line of frontier south of that between Shir Tépé and Sari Yazí which can in any way be satisfactory. . . the cession of Ak-robot and Chusma Islím (where alone supplies of water are available) to Russia has nullified its value and that of the Zulfikar Pass to the Afghans as a lateral line of communication, and thrown their line back.

Now it is not in the nature of the Russian Government or its diplomatic servants to be honest. We pointed out weeks ago that as, after the Crimean War, they had tried to foist on us a second Bolgrad, and had falsified their maps accordingly, as they tried to hoodwink us as to the double Sarakhs, so they would most certainly find out that Zulfikar meant anything except Zulfikar. Accordingly, we read in Colonel Ridgway's telegram of July 8 (apparently indited in or near the place in dispute) that there are but two lines of communication therein specified.

The Russian claim (only, be it borne in mind, to "Zulfikar") "practically secures the first line of cross-communication, and absolutely secures the second." Lord Salisbury having, on the 13th of July, received this telegram, reminded (No. 78, p. 57) the Russian Envoy that, so far back as the 12th of April, Russia had given her own consent to the exchange of Zulfikar as against Penjdeb, and that "no reservation was made as to a portion of the pass being retained by Russia; nothing was said as to the integrity of Russian communications. . . The difficulty as to the interruption which the promised cession is asserted to make in the communication between the Russian posts was not suggested until a later date. Her Majesty's Government do not admit that this consideration in any way affects the force of the Russian promise." On the Envoy saying (No. 79) that the Russians could not recede, "I said," writes Lord Salisbury to our representative at St. Petersburg, "that it was equally impossible for us to abandon the view I had submitted, or to recede from the promise which, on the faith of the promise given to us by the Russian Government, we had made to the Ameer." The wily Muscovite, probably to gain time to assemble an overwhelming force on the frontier, and to repeat at Zulfikar the Penjdeb massacre, wanted to shuffle out of the impasse by referring the matter to a Commission; this time a "geographical" one, a proposal which Lord Salisbury (who had, with great wisdom, directed the necessary inquiries to be made on the spot with care "not to give the impression that there is any intention on the part of this country of yielding to the Russian view") summarily scouted. A little such firmness on the part of the late Government would have saved us the whole imbroglio.

Accordingly, the Russians, seeing that the "change to be got" out of Lord Salisbury was of the smallest, found it advisable to come to some kind of understanding; and though it would be falsifying fact to say that we have gained for our ally any very great matter, we have at least prevented his being deliberately defrauded while under the ægis of our protection.

The Russians, then, after a show of delay (from July 18) sufficient to save appearances, got, or pretended to get, from the locus in quo a new map, showing that they were really yielding nothing in yielding that on which Lord Salisbury insisted.

Now we have always had a rooted distrust of Russian maps. They spring up, like mushrooms, at a moment's notice. And it is not without some little uneasiness—evidently shared by Sir P. Lumsden, when (p. 69) he says, in giving a very qualified assent to the last Muscovite proposal, and remarking that the only strategical frontier had been given up, "I consider, if the Russian map may be accepted as correct, everything has been secured that can, under the circumstances, be of value to the Ameer—that we see any settlement whatever based on a map emanating from so tainted a source. One ought to be chary in accepting a bill from a convicted forger, which, as above shewn, the Russian is. As things stand, the Cabinet seem to have done what they could, and we can only hope for the best.

We do not remember ever to have met with a Blue Book in which the characteristics of the two present English political parties, as to their dealings with foreign affairs, were more happily and strikingly contrasted. Outsiders are proverbially supposed to see most of the game. Bismarck may be taken as a typical outsider; he is a man—that is, not a dreamer, but one who knows his own mind, and acts accordingly. He has never even cared to conceal his unmitigated contempt for the travesty of statesmanship which has sacrificed British interests all over the world, "liberal" in everything but in preserving them; most liberal in throwing them to the winds. And we should have no sort of doubt as to the judgment which any impartial—say an American—statesman would pronounce as between two political parties, the one of which does, and the other does not, consider its country's reputation, and all over the world a matter so insignificant that it is not worth while, for its sake, to raise a voice or to lift a finger.

FEMALE MEDICAL AID FOR INDIAN WOMEN.—The meeting at the Mansion House, convened by the Lord Mayor, as already mentioned, to consider this subject, was, as we had anticipated, attended by a numerous and influential gathering. Official work prevented the Secretary of State for India from being there, though the presence of Lady Randolph Churchill, at whose instance the meeting was arranged, testified to his interest in the movement (to which he contributed £100). But the list of those who were able to attend contains, we think, nearly every name with which good work for India in this country is associated.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, October 16th; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad, October 14th; Ceylon, October 13th; Rangoon, October 9th.

THE Times correspondent at Rangoon telegraphs from Rangoon, Nov. 1:—

The opinion daily gains ground in well-informed circles that the reply of the Burmese Government to the ultimatum will be defiant or evasive. In either case General Prendergast's force will immediately cross the frontier.

Communication with Upper Burma has almost ceased. A trial embarkation was made, very successfully, to ascertain whether the men, more especially the Europeans, could comfortably settle on the decks of the steamers in the space allotted. The space was found ample. The men rapidly embarked and disembarked. Mr. Bernard was present.

An advanced position will, it is believed, be taken by General Prendergast's force in about two days' time. The men will go on board of the flotilla steamers, which are all in the river below Rangoon.

Mr. Sladen is to be Civil Commissioner. In case of need the Bombay and Burma Company's European officers in the Chindwin forest will take refuge in Manipore, and thence proceed to Assam, where the Chief Commissioner will assist them.

Communication with Ningyan is still open. British troops are stationed on the frontier adjoining Ningyan.

The flotilla steamer Shoay Myo, which left Mandalay on the 29th of October, arrived at Thayetmyo to-day, bringing several Europeans. All was quiet at Mandalay when she left. The ultimatum, however, had not then arrived.

The report that a strong body of Burmese troops had been sent to Ningyan is confirmed.

Some gentlemen from Thayetmyo have been allowed to land at Minhla without interference. The Kuligon fort, opposite Minhla, is reported to have twenty-five guns mounted.

WE are truly glad to hear from Bombay, under date Nov. 1, that the troops which have returned from Suakin have met with a splendid reception. They were publicly entertained, the expenses being defrayed by subscription among the inhabitants of Bombay.

LORD DUFFERIN is making himself as popular throughout India as he was in Canada. Reuter reports, yesterday, from Delhi:—

This morning the Viceroy laid the foundation stone of a general hospital, naming it after himself, at the request of the Native inhabitants, among whom his Excellency is very popular.

In a speech delivered on the occasion, Lord Dufferin said that he always felt pleasure in assisting to ameliorate the condition of the Indian people.

The Viceroy will leave for Ulwar to-night.

MR. HOLT HALLETT opportunely reminds us, in a very conclusive letter to the Times, that even the entire annexation of Burma would still leave 300 miles' interval, a great portion of which consists of all but impenetrable forest, between our advanced frontier and the boundary claimed by the French. No body can be a higher authority on such a point than one who has traversed so large a part of the intervening Provinces.

THE Athenæum says that the political article in the first number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, which will appear on the 1st of January, under the editorship of Mr. Demetrius Boulger, will be a survey of the policy and position of the English Government in India from the pen of Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I., Agent to the Governor-General in Central India. Professor Vambéry is preparing for the same number a paper on the Turks in Persia and the Caucasus.

M. LESSAR has, it seems, been delivering at Tiflis a lecture on the Central Asian question, in which, to the intense disgust of the military element, he rather depreciated the importance of Afghanistan. Says the Novosti:—

His calling Afghanistan an insignificant Power, and underrating the value of a strategical frontier, quite offended the military element. M. Lessar in frontier arrangements only cares for the ethnographical principle, and well-watered pastures for his beloved Turcoman nomads; whereas the military party considers strategical position of vital importance. The correspondent twits M. Lessar with drawing the material for his lecture almost exclusively from English sources.

"No man is a prophet in his own country."

Lessar ought by this time to have nearly reached his destination.

THAT procrastination has indeed been the thief, not only of time, but of the nation's interests, is forcibly brought before us by the subjoined sensible remarks of the Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore. Why, oh! why could not the defeat of the late Government have been antedated by a few months?

The Russian Government could hardly delay the departure of their Boundary Commissioners much longer. They have managed, since the English branch of the Commission appeared on the scene, to secure strategical positions, which will be of enormous value in the event of a final rupture, and they have done much to improve their line of communications between Sarakhs and the Caspian. They have now got as far as they could well hope to get, towards being able to modify the frontier by force of arms; and are naturally less reluctant to listen to our proposals for its delimitation by amicable arrangement. To listen to proposals, and to attend to them, are two different things. On our side, of course, we have not been idle; but it is open to doubt, to say the least, whether we have made so much use of the time as the Russians have. Our Boundary Commissioners have collected a vast amount of information, which would be exceedingly useful if it were acted on. In spite, however, of the optimists who hold that the history of the Boundary Commission has been so far an unbroken record of magnificent success, the opinions held by officers actually serving on the Commission—such opinions, that is, as are allowed to reach the public ear—are by no means hopeful. Still it is a great thing to know that a party of British officers have been travelling about the Afghan frontier for several months without getting into serious trouble, and we may reasonably regret that the experiment was not tried earlier.

SIR R. THOMPSON, though he has inspected most of the flooded districts in Bengal, had, at least up to the date to which we have received Native papers, failed to conciliate his subjects; one journal saying that he displays "so much incapacity for administrative work day by day, that the loyalty of the Bengalis may be affected," a threat which we are disposed to encounter with unruffled equanimity. The Charuvartha adds:—

Bengal is now in a critical condition. The people have no means to meet the impending famine, and the Government ought to assist them. The situation will take a serious turn if the Government remains indifferent. There will not only be a widespread famine, but also terrible mortality in several places. Who can say how many thousand people will die of starvation if the Government do not adopt precautionary measures?

We cannot help (says the Gramvarta Prakashika) shedding tears over the sufferings of the miserable and helpless people and at the attitude of the Lieutenant-Governor towards them. We now earnestly beseech our countrymen to render assistance. Unless they do so Bengal will soon turn into a wilderness. They should lose no time in raising subscriptions.

It is not unnatural that the Native Indian Press should be much occupied with the forthcoming elections here, and every well-considered expression of Native opinion cannot be too cordially welcomed; unfortunately, there are few such, many of the writers indulging in vague denunciations of things as they are, and being equally impractical in suggesting remedies.

BUT here is one suggesting, as regards the Indian Council, something definite, and which, when the constitution of that body is under consideration, may be thought deserving of notice. The Subada Patrika of Bombay urges that—

The presence of one or two competent Native members in the Council of the Secretary of State would lead to a clearer perception of most Indian matters than cartloads of foolscap and red tape officially sent on from here could effect, and a single well-considered despatch from the India Office would equal in efficacy a twelvemonths' turns and twists of the administrative machinery on the spot. But the question is—how to secure the prime condition, the presence of Native councillors at the India Office in London? At first sight it would look like the proverbial belling of the cat by the mice, which, if carried out, would remove all evils, but which itself was impossible of accomplishment, and the Anglo-Indians in their present mood are sure to raise a howl at a simple attempt in that direction, as if the very foundations of the earth were being undermined; but we do think the attempt is worth making, as the English people, with their next House of Commons, may not consider it unreasonable to have two individuals to represent two hundred millions of the Queen's Indian subjects in the Council-board of Her Majesty's Secretary of State amidst a sea of Anglo-Indians.

THE command of the expedition to coerce Theebaw could hardly have been placed in better hands than in those of General Prendergist, who has had Burmese experience, and has seen service in Persia, throughout the Mutiny, and in Abyssinia. The total force will be about 11,000 men, which will be conveyed up the Irrawaddy River in flat-bottomed boats, already chartered by the Indian Government. The brigade commands will be filled by Brigadier-General F. B. Norman, C.B., Bengal S.C.; Brigadier-General G. S. White, V.C., C.B. (half-pay, late 92nd Highlanders), lately employed in the Soudan; and Brigadier-General H. H. Foord, Madras S.C. The force will concentrate at Rangoon on the earliest possible date, and the first action will, it is believed, be fought at Minhlu.

WE referred the other day to the delegacy of persons from India to further the real or supposed interests of India at the approaching General Election, and could not help inquiring by whom they were delegated. We shall not be very curious as to this matter if they will but strictly follow out the following "instructions" suggested by Sir Madava Rao:—

Delegate should devote himself to the main object in view—viz. to interest the people of Great Britain in the welfare of India.

He should not identify himself with anyone of the political parties in England.

That party is the best which does its best for the welfare of India. This is the main line to be followed.

If Lord Ripon be dear to India, it is not because he is a Liberal, but simply because he is so earnest in promoting India's welfare.

Act in consultation with the other delegates, in view to avoid divergences and to insure concert and harmony.

Gratefully acknowledge the great good which the British Government have done to India.

Call for greater interest and sympathy in and for Indian affairs, greater respect and regard for Indian feelings and opinions generally.

Show that India possesses greater political intelligence than ever before.

Plead generally for moderate taxation of necessities of life and for greater security of landed tenures.

Dwell on the value of India to England, and the value of England to India.

While stating aims and aspirations, show reliance on British wisdom, justice, and benevolence.

Say we want our views and feelings regarding Indian matters to be better recognised and respected in the local administration.

WANT of space prevented our inserting, last week, the subjoined recollections of former Burmese wars which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette, and which will doubtless interest our readers:—

In the precarious state of our relations with the despotic monarch of Upper Burma, it seems opportune to glance at the course of events of our two wars with the Burmese, and to consider how the experience gained may be useful in the probable event of a third invasion being necessitated. In the commercial transactions of many years, difficulties had arisen, and minor disputes with the Burmese had often occurred; but, till 1824, when war was first declared, little was known of the geography, the climate, or the people. Operations were commenced at the most unsuitable season, and, for some time after the capture of Rangoon, sickness and terrible mortality paralysed the army. At length an advance was made, many towns were taken, and an almost interminable succession of stockades were stormed. But between the stages in our conquests, there were long intervals of inactivity, partly enforced by the difficulties of procuring transports and provisions, but due also in some measure to want of energy and enterprise. From the beginning, the European regiments, though utterly inexperienced in such warfare, attacked the stockades with the utmost intrepidity, and with almost unvaried success. They were generally unprovided with scaling-ladders and unaided by artillery; but they scrambled over somehow, and then the bayonet quickly decided the contest. But similar results did not attend the operations of the Sepoys; for on some occasions their attack failed, and once, when Sir Archibald Campbell was persuaded to send a force of Sepoys only, to attack a stockaded position, a disastrous repulse ensued. After the conclusion of the treaty of Yandaboo in 1826, we evacuated the country, leaving behind no memorials of our victories, and none of our occupation save some well-filled burying-grounds. Twenty-five years later, when the memory of our conquest had become dim, and Europe was represented at Rangoon only by a few missionaries and merchants, the Burmese officials became insolent, and soon after aggressive. In 1852, when several outrages had been committed, and all pacific applications for redress had failed, it was deemed necessary to invade the country again. The land forces of the expedition in 1852 was commanded by Major-General Godwin, a Peninsula veteran, who had served with some distinction in the former Burmese War, and who was imbued with its experience. Hence, perhaps, some of the errors of 1824 were repeated. When the war ended by the annexation of Lower Burma, or Pegu, as it is alternately called, undeniable evidence of our triumph remained in our possession of a large, peaceful, and contented province, which actually paid its expenses in the first year of our sway. Those only who have served in Burma know how the Burmese "take to" the British soldiers, and how they dislike Sepoys with all the distinctions and observances of caste. Long before the conquest of Pegu was completed, we had raised a Burmese regiment, which did good service. A detachment of the corps fired their muskets for the first time with ball and against a band of armed robbers. It would be desirable, for reasons into which it would be ungracious to enter, that only a small portion of the force should consist of ordinary Sepoys. Stalwart Beloochees or hardy and daring Ghoorkhas would be more suitable. That mighty highway, the Irrawaddy, is navigable at all times for vessels of light draught for several hundreds of miles, and for large vessels after the rains. There should be no great difficulty, therefore, in sending a force rapidly up the river so as to take the Burmese positions in reverse. It would be unsafe to assume that the Burmese, whenever we may next meet them as foes, will be unprovided with "arms of precision" and European instructors. Yet, when our arms, our discipline, our transport, our sanitary arrangements, and our varied experience of war are considered, there should be no doubt of a short, victorious, and decisive campaign.

THE Chinese Government, says the Progrès Militaire, intends to raise a standing army of from 600,000 to 700,000 men on a peace footing, to be doubled in the event of war. The authorities at Peking have ordered two fitted cruisers from Messrs. Armstrong and Co., and two others from the Vulcan Works at Stettin. The Chen-Pao learns, in addition to the above, that orders have been given to different European nations for twelve gunboats, large and small. The ships and engines will be constructed after the newest and most improved models. China, it is said, hopes to possess in two years a formidable navy; and Reuter informs us that the three vessels built in Germany have at length reached their destination at Taku, having remained in safe quarters at Kiel and Wilhelmshafen until the settlement of the Franco-Chinese difficulty.

Chit Chat.

It is popularly supposed that lightning strikes downwards; but researches tend to show that this is an error, and that upward strokes are the rule. How, then, about lightning conductors? Are they of use?

According to the Buddhist religion, when a person dies his "karma" (soul) betakes itself to some other earthly tabernacle. Mark the result in China. "One of the most powerful reasons for killing female children," says the Japan Weekly Mail, "is to punish the perverse spirit which has elected to be born in the form of a woman." This is certainly a peculiar way of administering a severe lesson to the soul which chooses to clothe itself too frequently in female bodies.

DEMOCRACY has its advantages. When four hundred millions of money are spent on ships some of the cash goes to "carry elections." This is how things are done in San Francisco. In the same city the clergy enter the pulpits with a revolver under their gown. Yet this is a land of freedom, where the people govern and protect themselves!

THE recent fire at Resht in Persia destroyed eighteen caravansera's and 1,028 shops, beside ten mosques, a school, and two public baths; in short, the town was well-nigh demolished.

A NATIVE contemporary has discovered the cause of the earthquake in Kashmir, the floods in Bengal, the dearth in Mysore, and all the other ills which are distressing poor India at the present time. An anomaly in the shape of a lemon within a lemon has been discovered at Bombay, and the Sacred Books of the Hindus proclaim that "when flower within flower and fruit esconced in fruit shall grow, O King, will the Yuga's end approach." But as the Pioneer rightly points out if this be the criterion the end of the world would happen once a-week, as double reproduction is by no means an uncommon idiosyncrasy on the part of Nature.

A BERLIN doctor, after travelling round the world making experiments on his own self, has discovered a cure for sea-sickness. Lie coiled up on your side, knee to chin, for four days, then take one gramme of chloral hydrate. This is indeed a "mockery of woe."

SIMLA is in ecstasies. There is to be a fancy dress ball, the costumes whereof are to be beyond the pale of description—so elegant, and, it is to be feared, so costly, will they be. But then the fair damsels will be bewitching to a surprising degree; for was not money made to circulate?

At the recent dance given at Simla by the Maharajah and Maharani of Cooh Behar, "powder" was the rule in the case of the lady guests, so "the picturesqueness of the scene was greatly enhanced." Thus chronicles the correspondent of the Pioneer. But some persons are old-fashioned enough to hold to the opinion that Nature turned out her daughters as she meant them to be, and to make mud-pies over the "human face divine" may be fashionable, but none the less it shows execrable taste, and deplorable want of common-sense.

In olden days duelling was very rife in India. The first time an appeal was made to this mode of settling disputes of honour was in 1664, when the President of Bombay, where the affair occurred, expressed an opinion that it was "the effect of that accursed Bombay punch, to the shame, scandal, and ruin of the nation and religion."

THERE is at present a picture in Calcutta whereof the intrinsic value is six rupees, say twelve shillings, yet already over 200,000 rupees, or about £15,000 sterling, have been spent to regain possession of the precious relic!

BOMBAY has just imported from Liverpool a pack of nineteen couples of foxhounds for the use of the Hunt.

A PORTUGUESE clerk at Bombay has discovered the road to rapid promotion. His plan is, like all great inventions, extremely simple. He administered poison to his superiors, and so "cleared the file" to make way for himself; but in a weak moment of confiding simplicity he revealed his plan to a brother clerk, who did not see things in the same light, and let out the secret.

In some ways India must be a delightful place wherein to end one's days. When you are old and decrepid, should the Natives want a sacrifice to appease their gods, they administer "bhang" to you, and when in a state of intoxication you are made to promise that you will give your body as an offering to the offended deities. But when sober you find it no easy matter to escape from fulfilling your promise!

THREE THOUSAND square miles of land with water to the tune of seven feet. Such is the state of affairs in Bengal, where 2,000,000 people have not seen their lands for weeks.

PEDIGREES are highly valued in this country, save by upstarts, who, not being able to claim descent beyond their own mothers, naturally affect to despise "birth." But what can compare to the antiquity of the Armenian patriarchs of Baghdad, who trace their origin back to the Garden of Eden, and boast of speaking the language in which the Almighty bade Adam and Eve go forth and live by the sweat of their brow.

GAMBLING clubs are the rage nowadays. But what can compare to the one evening of whist at Calcutta in the close of the last century when Mr. Barwell, Chief Justice Le Maistre, Colonel Leslie, and Sir Philip Francis played. The first-named lost six lakhs of rupees, or upwards of £60,000, while the Bench won £20,000, the Army £10,000, and the Civil Service £30,000. This is something like an evening.

THE suggestion has been put forward that condemned criminals should be made the subjects of choleraic experiments, on the ground that if they die they are no worse off than before!

"If," says the Statesman, "the Maharajah of Hill Tipperah were wise, he will appoint an able man as his Minister, and will avoid for the future all personal intercourse with the Political Agent." This is much akin to a suggestion that if the Queen be wise she will appoint a clever private secretary (which she has done years ago), and avoid all intercourse with any Minister whose views are not in harmony with her own. If an English paper were to write such unconstitutional advice all Britain would be up in arms. Does the Statesman want it to appear that nobody cares what it pens? If otherwise, its suggestion is impracticable, and, to many minds, scarcely loyal.

An enthusiastic reformer has been airing in the Indian Press his ideas as to the exaggeration of language now so much in vogue. In the very letter in which he draws attention to the evil he uses the expression "weeping of the great." Surely he is hoist with his own petard!

A "NATIVE Thinker" is using the columns of the Madras Times to enlighten his fellow-countrymen as to the habits and customs conducive to health or the reverse; but his ideas are very elementary. He says: "Do not go about in the thoroughfare without anything on the head." Sound advice, but scarcely needed, it might have been thought, under a tropical sun. The conclusion, too, of the paragraph is charmingly naïve. The words are, i.e., bare-headed. Surely everyone who can read English knows that "without anything on the head" is the same as "bare-headed?"

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ENGLISH LIFE IN CHINA.*

We took up this work with an expectation of obtaining from it both information and entertainment, and in neither respect have we been disappointed. Major Knollys is known to be able to wield pen as well as sword, and he has succeeded in putting before his readers a very vivid impression of our countrymen's life—except in the tea season, it is, in some places, almost vegetation—in China.

Hong Kong, with which our author began his experiences in China, has been so often and so well described, that it need not detain us; the filth and squalor of the Chinese town are, too, an unsavoury subject. Major Knollys had the good fortune to be present at a Queen's birthday parade, and the old saying of the Indian chief was recalled to his mind, when he once again heard the National Anthem, "Is your Sovereign a divinity, that you worship her with such music?" Yet John Chinaman "does not see it." For he says (p. 111): "In all the sciences, and in most departments of civilization, you greatly surpass us. But in one respect we are undoubtedly far ahead. We alone understand true harmony; you are ignorant of its very first principles." We devoutly hope that the Chinese will not take it into their heads to emulate the King of Siam by contributing some unadulterated Chinese music, rendered by Native performers, to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition next year!

On one subject, the defence of our Eastern settlements, we have often dwelt, and we are glad to see that, as regards Hong Kong, Major Knollys has called attention to this point (pp. 59, 60); though we are scarcely as confident as he seems to be regarding the efficacy of the measures taken, since his visit, for "rapidly putting it in a far more efficient state of defence."

The "Republic of Shanghai" is an interesting topic. Here we have a colony of Europeans; each nation (American, French, and German, besides our own) with its own internal arrangements, but with a joint council to settle the affairs of all. A peculiarity is that, in what may, for want of a better expression, be called international cases, it is the defendant's Consul who sits as assessor to the (dummy) Chinese judge, and who practically decides the award to be given.

It has never been supposed that the French had a special gift in the colonizing line, notwithstanding that Algeria might have been a very fair school as to what "to eat, drink, and avoid." But we have rarely met with a more striking exemplification of their utter helplessness in this respect than that presented by our author (at pp. 74–80) of the contrast between the internal arrangements of the French settlement at Shanghai and the American (or our own). We strongly commend these pages to the attention of any thoughtful reader.

The action of our countrymen in China is well illustrated at Hankow, the centre of the tea trade, where, with an English population of perhaps fifty, the affairs of the community are managed—of course, without the least reference to the Chinese—by a municipal council of their own. "There is," says our author, "a fine spirit of pride and independence—observable, indeed, throughout China in precise proportion as we are cut off from external aid—which makes us proud of our nation, and not prone to resent the intended sarcasm of the Brahmin, 'You

English can do nothing but spin cotton and conquer the world." Yet the tendency to "sit on," and even to oppress, the Natives, in which Major Knollys seems rather to glory as a proof of the conscious superiority of Europeans being admitted, no less consciously, by Asiatics, is in execrable taste, and cannot tend to increase that good feeling towards us in China, which would be truly invaluable to us in the certain event of a war with Russia, in which China would be simply an ideal ally.

To turn to another matter, we do not think that the writer's allusion (at p. 134) to the notorious doings at Bazeilles in 1870 would make him a persona grata at Berlin, were he ever appointed to attend the annual manoeuvres of the Prussian army. Tangliu had, he says, "once been a flourishing city, but in 1864 it was occupied by the Taeping rebels, who slaughtered indiscriminately and wholesale every inhabitant on whom they could lay hands, and then left it in the condition in which the Prussians left Bazeilles in 1870, there being, by the bye, a strong resemblance between the two races in their method of carrying on war." Now, surely this is far too strong. We well know that Bazeilles was treated with an exceptional severity, which we should be the last to defend. But the inhabitants were not sliced in pieces, nor exterminated. And, by the way, was it not the Bavarians who were the executioners on the occasion?

As new to the average reader as anything in the book will be found the account of the proceedings of the Charsee, or tea-taster. "The faculty (p. 151) can hardly be acquired in less time" than five or six years. For ourselves, we believe it can be as little "acquired" as connoisseurship in wine. We have known people possessing admirable cellars, laid in by their predecessors, who had not an inkling of what wine is. Truly, for such an one his progenitors might say—

The wine we stored with so much care for all the pleasure he would have of it. As of wine-taster, so of tea-taster, it may be said that he must be born, not made. Just as there are people who cannot distinguish between one melody and another, nor know when they play a false note.

We hear not a little in England about city guilds, turtle soup, feasts costing thousands of pounds, magnificent halls only used for banquets, and so on. We assure our readers, if they will believe us, on Major Knollys's authority, that the Shangsi and Tchangsai Corporations beat that of London "into fits." Our Major obtained leave—rarely accorded—to visit their palaces, and was, with his party, "shown over a series of halls until we lost entire count of their numbers." Here is one: a banquetting hall (p. 249). "Assuming," says our author, "that one acre measures about seventy yards each way, several acres of guild roofing and ceiling are exposed to my view, and every square inch inside and out is covered with porcelain ware of surpassing brilliancy, delicacy, and beauty. Imagine the treasures of a dozen Mortlocks in the shape of the most valuable breakfast, dinner, and dessert services, spread out before you, most neatly and artistically affixed to the roofs of Regent-street, in a bright July sun. There is not a scrap of coarse work; the yellows, the purples, the blues, and the reds, are of the most delicately blended colours, and these superb elliptically-shaped tiles slope gently up to the topmost ridges, where at home we should look for chimney-pots, and wind down to the eaves, where we should expect gutters, finishing off with twists which are rather Chinese-ish and pagoda-ish, but which certainly cannot be called out of place. Really a few dozen of these tiles, turned into a dessert service, would constitute a magnificent wedding present."

Major Knollys seems violently prejudiced against the Chinese. Of course, he can say—

I've seen, and sure I ought to know;

but when he tells us (p. 222), that "by no Utopian perversion of truth could we call the Chinese brave," he seems to us to betray an utter disregard of history. We strongly advise him to read Mr. Boulger's Central Asian Papers, Mr. Colquhoun's letters to the Times, and to study the story of the late campaign in Tonquin. He might, too, learn somewhat on the subject from poor murdered "Chinese Gordon."

Perhaps the Major's dislike is attributable to the instinctive feeling which may be called smell. Animals have been supposed to communicate by the power of producing different emanations. "There is," says the author, "no living creature whose presence is not accompanied by emanations utterly loathsome to those not of its own species, or even tribe. Let the cleanest woman-finger touch a bait, and no rat will look at it. Chinese, even children daily washed, have the inevitable civet cat-like accompaniment of all natives, the Bouquet de Chinois." "The Chinese (p. 92) do not mix with us in society as much as they otherwise would, on account of our esprit de corps. Nay, the very oxen distinguish between Chinese and English," and (p. 297) "these mild creatures, once roused, more savage than many an honestly swaggering British bull," more than once attempted to make short work of the Major.

We do not propose to follow Major Knollys into the much-vexed missionary question. Missionaries, looking, however honestly, at their own labours, are apt to colour the result in rosy tints, and to exaggerate their successes. That a missionary should, after twelve years' work, be able (p. 208) to boast but three converts, that another convert of seven years' standing used (p. 209) to open the chapel, after evening service, as a gaming-house, and that there is still no possibility of rendering the name of God but by some roundabout paraphrase, are facts significant enough. The "convert" who was once reproached by a missionary for calling on false gods during a typhoon (p. 200) was probably no very unfair specimen:—"What for no have two chancey?" (chances) was his cautious reply; "Christ number one chancey, Buddha number two chancey." Not that they treat their own gods with much respect. "Buddha," said a priest charged with irreverence, "smokes his incense and is glad to get it, why should not I smoke my tobacco?" (p. 312).

Our traveller seems to have seen—he has certainly recorded nothing in the way of natural scenery—equal to that which figures in his account of the monastery of Yuen Fuh, where he was taken, not only for a "foreign devil," but for a devil incarnate, and dragged into the temple—a rare chance—to be introduced to two of his brethren in the shape of "two images of demons (p. 310) whom the Chinese worship to avert malignant influences."

We have no space for further extracts, and advise the reader to get the book for himself. Despite occasional tall writing, and somewhat violent prejudices, it is as good and as amusing a popular account of China as we remember to have seen.

THE CHILDREN OF INDIA.*

The title of this book is somewhat misleading. Professing to relate exclusively to the "children of India," it gives a vast amount of information in regard to the people at large, their habits, customs, religions, and festivals. It is not pretended that the volume contains anything new; indeed, by the very nature of things, this was scarcely possible. Nor does the author aim at high writing or grandiloquent language—quite the reverse. The style is most plain and unpretentious, while the words are short and easy; it is, in fact, a children's book, and, as such, scarcely comes within the pale of literary criticism. To our mind there is, perhaps, too much of the "goody goody." At every turn religion is brought in "by the ears," in season and out of season moral precepts are inculcated, and words of advice and warning are paraded with unrestrained earnestness. The money-bags, too, are very loudly shaken, and hints, and more than hints, being scattered broadcast in every direction. All this may, perhaps, be right, proper, and even necessary. We should be the last to discourage missionary enterprise, and if this modus operandi be successful, "the end justifies the means," but we doubt whether in religious matters it is altogether prudent to make one's actions so completely of the "earth earthy." Our experience is, however, doubtless far inferior to that of Miss Marston, whose efforts are most laudable; she has contrived to compress into a few score pages an immense deal of information in regard to India, and we are pleased to add, that having examined her work with considerable care and attention, we have not succeeded in detecting errors of fact. A child who is familiar with this little brochure, will know a great deal more about the Queen's domains in the East than nine out of ten amongst the ordinary adult world.

RUSSIA'S POWER OF ATTACKING INDIA.†

Some little while since, in reviewing Professor Vambéry's "Coming Struggle for India," we suggested the dissemination, in a popular form, with a view to the forthcoming elections, of the main facts therein set forth. Not having the gift of prophesy, we could not foresee that these facts, with many more added to them, would be published in a lively and "taking" style for threepence by Mr. Marvin, than whom no one is better qualified to deal with the subject.

We cannot pretend to reproduce, as we should desire to do, the many proofs adduced by Mr. Marvin of Russia's ability, holding, as she does, the positions which a Government, deliberately heedless of the country's interests, has allowed her to acquire, to smite us hip and thigh on the Afghan side. Russia can mass on the Caspian a quarter of a million men, all reliable, all her own troops, with no dread of insurrection in their rear. We, with possible defection of Native States induced by Russian intrigue, with a veritable army of budmashes, counted by hundreds of thousands, ready to rise, at the least sign of a reverse, and to exterminate, with every circumstance of outrage, all Europeans throughout India, have not as strong a force. No wonder that we have few troops to throw forward; though, as Skobelev most justly remarked, if we keep our army waiting to receive an attack, we are beaten before a shot is fired. No wonder that Russian generals argue thus:—

"You have 75,000 British troops to keep down 250,000,000 Natives, some of whom must hate you. We declare war. Admit that you put every British soldier on the Afghan frontier. If we can only get our Caspian army placed alongside you, your force of 75,000 British troops will stand between 100,000 to 250,000 Russians and the 250,000,000 more or less neutral or disaffected people of India. You are brave, but our superior numbers would enable us to break through your 75,000 troops and march on to India."

But that space forbids, we would gladly refer more at length to this little pamphlet; to those portions of it, in which the writer has, with much industry, proved, what the "Perish India" school habitually deny, the invaluable benefit which the possession of India confers on England, we shall have occasion, ere long, to recur.

NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The attention of our readers will at once be attracted by an article founded on personal experience, and, therefore, doubtless accurate in every detail, on the effects of "British Rule in India," as exemplified in "The History of an Indian District," Sirsa. The result of our fifty years' administration of that district may be summed up in two words, Peace and Prosperity, whereas that of the previous period had been riot, wretchedness, and ruin. In 1850 land was selling at 3d. an acre, now at 10s. The value of the land of the district was, fifty years ago, scarce £1,000; it is now a million sterling; and this, notwithstanding a proportionate increase in the amount levied as assessment. The entire district, formerly a favourite resort of armed robber bands, is now so secure that the 8,000 square miles, containing a population of over a quarter of a million, has, until recently, been managed by a single European magistrate, with five subordinate magistrates and 400 police. Is there any district in England of corresponding population which can say as much for itself? These are the facts to oppose to the empty theorising of Baboos and their supporters. The whole article claims more than cursory perusal; it merits careful study.

The "shadow cast before" of the coming elections has naturally furnished more than one writer with a suggestive topic. The first article, Mr. Alfred Austin's "Skeletons at the (Radical) Feast," the "Vicar of Bray's," Manifesto, Mr. Vernon Smith's "Church and the Coming Elections," "Sonnets to a Liberal Churchman," "The Birmingham Caucus," all deal with this subject. We would especially invite attention to Mr. Austin's very well-written and very incisive article. The Birmingham Tory, who delineates the doings of the Caucus in his town, has, we hope, somewhat overstated his case in saying that fully two-thirds of the entire population are under the thumb of the Caucus. If it be so, the fact bodes ill for Lord Randolph Churchill's candidature.

Mr. Roberts's paper on the effects of one-sided Free Trade will well repay a second perusal, at a period when a hostile fleet might in a short time, bring the country, now all but wholly dependent on foreign supplies for its food, to starvation point, and when so many of the best manufacturing orders are being, even by Englishmen, "placed" abroad.

Mr. Keibel reaches, for the present at least, the last of the Tory Premiers, who have passed away, in the person of Lord Beaconsfield, a true appreciation of whose policy is probably reserved for future ages. Mr. Keibel's remarks are, as usual, well written, and, as always, full of point. Space forbids our noticing the other Essays which go to make up a number of more than average merit, and, at the present juncture, of far more than average interest and importance.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.†

The first article in this number, that narrating the services of Sir William Peel of the Shannon Naval Brigade, will at once fix the attention of the Indian reader. Peel's work in the Mutiny of 1857-8, will not soon be forgotten. It may not be generally known that his much-lamented death was due to his own self-devotion; he would "share and share alike" with his men, and insisted on having, after his brilliant exploits at the siege of Lucknow—is it really de rigueur to spell it Lakhkhannau?—the same conveyance as other wounded men. Unfortunately the palanquin assigned him had been employed for the conveyance of a smallpox patient; and Peel, prostrated by over-exertion and wounds, could not, with a constitution already debilitated by exposure, make head against the disease. Everyone will read this article, in which Peel's services in the Crimea are, however, referred to at greater length than those rendered by him in India.

A beginning is made of a series of papers which promise to be most interesting, on the "Parliamentary Generals in the Great Civil War." The commander selected for the present article is Essex, whom Charles, with his usual fatuity, drove into the camp of his opponents. The illustrations to this paper, consisting of characteristic portraits, and of views of some of the more important cities as they appeared at the period referred to, will attract much attention, as will the next article, on the French Navy, from a study of which our new First Lord of the Admiralty would hardly rise without gleaning not a little useful information.

A detailed account, by Admiral Ingram, of the defence of Monte Video in 1846, is, as having been written by one took part in it, well worth perusal, and will interest many, on account of the particulars given concerning the events which first brought "to the fore" Garibaldi, who, up to that time, had been a mere skipper of a coasting vessel, and whose marvellous powers of leadership were soon afterwards to be displayed on a stage of vastly greater dimensions and importance.

We have received several numbers of the Journal of Indian Art, published by Mr. Griggs, of Elm House, Peckham. This exquisitely got-up book demands a fuller review than our space, this week, permits us to give it. We shall have occasion to notice it at length in our next issue.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

- CAVANAGH—Oct. 21, at York, the wife of Major A. Cavanagh, D.A.C.G., Gordon Highlanders, of a son.
COCHRANE—Oct. 21, at Scend Manor House, the wife of Captain B. O. Cochrane, R.A., of a son.
CREASE—Oct. 22, at Portsmouth, the wife of Colonel J. F. Crease, C.B., R.M.A., of a daughter.
CROSBIE—Oct. 23, at Lexden, the wife of Captain P. Crosbie, of a son.
LEFROY—Oct. 26, at Colchester, the wife of Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Lefroy, of a son.
LONGFIELD—Oct. 27, at Winchester, the wife of Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Longfield, of a son.
LUCAS—Oct. 26, at Teignmouth, the wife of Colonel A. W. Lucas, of a daughter.
MERIVALE—Oct. 27, at Ely, the wife of Walter Merivale, C.E., of a daughter.
PEMBERTON—Oct. 29, at Cadogan-place, the wife of Colonel Leigh Pemberton, C.B., of a son.
SCOTT—Oct. 29, at Sandhurst, the wife of Major F. K. Scott, R.E., of a son.
WALFORD—Oct. 24, at Felixstowe, the wife of Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Walford, of a son.
WATKIN—Oct. 30, at Woolwich, the wife of Major H. Watkin, Royal Artillery, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

- HADDEN—STRONG—Oct. 23, at Paddington, Captain C. F. Hadden, R.A., to Frances Mabel, youngest daughter of the late Colonel Clement Strong, Coldstream Guards.
MACKAY—WIMBERLEY—Oct. 22, at Inverness, Duncan L. M. Mackay, Esq., B.C.S., to Marion Gordon C., elder daughter of Captain Douglas Wimberley.
PRICHARD—HUME-SMEDLEY—Oct. 21, at Tenby, G. H. Prichard, Esq., to Edith, youngest daughter of the late Edward Hume-Smedley, of Ceylon.
RADCLIFFE—ANGEL—Oct. 23, at Ealing, Alexander R. Skene, second son of Lieut.-General Radcliffe, Madras Army, to Floris, eldest daughter of H. B. Angel, Esq., of Ealing.
SANDYS—HARVEY—Oct. 22, at Brooklands, Cheshire, Major F. R. Sandys, late R.A., to Alice Cummins, youngest daughter of Alexander C. Harvey, of Brooklands.

DEATHS.

UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS IN INDIA.

THE intercourse between the Chinese and ourselves has usually led to the conclusion that it was the Chinese, rather than the English, who were the copyists of the results of each others' civilization. They have borrowed from us, not only cannon and steamboats, but officials of every kind, and are in a fair way of reproducing both railways and telegraphs. Of gunpowder we suppose that we must make them a present. There is no evidence that Roger Bacon ever went to China. There is evidence that the Chinese had it, or something like it, at a very early date. We may assume that East and West invented it cheek-by-jole somewhere about the same time.

Up to a comparatively recent date we had taken nothing from the Chinese but their tea, and for this we used to be made to pay pretty heavily. Then a revelation suddenly seemed to have informed that marvellous entity, the wisdom of Parliament, that Government offices consumed too much red-tape. Accordingly, resort was had, of all parts of the globe, to China, and a second importation, yclept competitive examination, was made therefrom. The consumption of red-tape was, in fact, henceforth to be entrusted to other hands. We have not heard that the tape used has diminished one nail in breath, or one yard in length; on the contrary, the manufacture is understood to be in a flourishing condition.

Now these competitive examinations, probably because they were not indigenous, did not seem to flourish in the soil to which they had been transplanted, and some astounding results ensued. Men got certificates of proficiency in subjects wherein they had never been examined. One of the first Arabic linguists of the day was a man who is understood to be one of two or three Europeans who had performed the Hajj, or Mecca pilgrimage, was put "under the harrow" and "ploughed" in Arabic by the Civil Service Commissioners, who are the high priests of the newly-introduced ritual, and this by an examiner who, when the irate linguist referred the papers for revision to one who is not only an Arabic linguist, but admittedly among the first of Arabic scholars, was pronounced "a disgrace to his profession."

Without alleging that the system has in all respects been a failure, we do aver that it has fostered cramming, and its natural consequence, priggism, to an alarming extent. It may be thought, by some, a set-off against these evils, that it has, in these times of depression, given existence to a new trade, that of cramming. But the percentage of crammers to the population is too small to counterbalance the evil of the literally ephemeral character of the knowledge which they impart! When shall we learn that an overloaded mind, like an overloaded stomach, retains little or nothing, and that an examination, to be of any value, should deal with subjects, a knowledge of which will be useful in the Examiner's future career?

We have enough of this kind of thing, what with Civil Service Commissioners, and with School Boards teaching modern languages and decimal fractions to future scullery maids, in England. Such people have been immortalized in Peacock's "Gryll Grange" as being loth to allow a drayman to lower a barrel into a cellar unless he could expound the mechanical principles on which he performed the operation.

In India things seem no better. And, indeed, we have been led to advert to this subject by articles concerning it which have appeared in our contemporaries, the Pioneer and the Civil and Military Gazette, from the latter of which we extract a paragraph which invites consideration. Are we, or are we not, going in India on the right system as regards examinations of all kinds in educational matters? All the twaddle in the world—and we have had of late plenty of this sort of thing—will not make a Native an Englishman nor an Englishman a Native. Why, then, try to foist on the Natives, as a kind of entrance fee to many positions, studies needless, and in many cases repulsive, to them? Why ignore the fact that our modes of thought, and consequently our literature, differ wholly from theirs? In most respects for the better. True. But what is gained by putting Native students through a course of recondite studies in our language and literature instead of drawing their attention to the best—and there is no lack of excellence—in their own?

Indian universities (says our contemporary) have the quaintest notions of setting subjects for the study of their undergraduates, and the Madras University is no exception to the rule. For the first examination in Arts during 1884, one of the subjects set in the English examination was "The Princess": while in the course for the B.A. degree, we have the Frankleynes and Monke's Tales; and for the M.A. degree Chaucer's "Troilus and Cressida," Shakespeare's "Troilus and Cressida," and Shelley's "Alastor." This is truly a wonderful collection of subjects. Why on earth a poem so unmeaning as "The Princess," and one so completely removed from all eastern lines of thought, should be chosen, it is hard to see; and it is as difficult to guess why "Alastor" should have been selected from among the poems of Shelley. But, at any rate, these poems have this advantage, that they are written in modern English, the study of which may be of some value to the undergraduates. But putting aside the desirability of directing the close study of the story of Troilus and Cressida, what possible use will an acquaintance with the language of Chaucer, or of the railings of Thersites, be to the Madrassi graduate? What has a student gained towards a knowledge of modern English by being able to quote an instance of the old English double negative, or an absolute strong preterite, or by being able to tell of what Homeric name Cressida is a corruption? Probably not one of our readers could tell off-hand the exact meaning of ten or twelve words in every page of Chaucer, words long since fallen into disuse; and to require native undergraduates to answer such questions seems to us wholly absurd. Fancy a competent English examiner solemnly sitting down and inditing such a question as this:—"A touch of female vanity appears in one (!) of Cressida's soliloquies, cite it." And then we are surprised that the course of University education does not fit young men for the practical work of life.

Now, is an examination a test of proficiency in all knowledge requisite for success in whatever career the examiner may have chosen, or is it simply a circus, in which an examiner is, to the detriment of the unhappy candidates, to ride round repeatedly on the same hobby-horse? "Chaucer" is as pleasant and as instructive reading as we know. To Englishmen who wish to learn the history of the people of their own land, we could suggest none better. But why should the history of a foreign country be thrust down the throat of a Native? Has India no literature and no history? We do not, as some well-meaning people fancy, bring Native minds into closer contact with our own by any such proceedings; we only accentuate the fact how impossible it is to weld into one, two lines of thought, each in itself good, each in itself truly and purely in accordance with the genius of the people from whom it emanates, but utterly divergent, and in some respects incapable of converging.

And then, "Troilus and Cressida"! What is it possible that a student can gain by grinding it up? Morality? Some, we wish we could say many, Anglo-Indian ladies can—as all can if they do not most scandalously neglect their duty to their own sex—tell us that among Native ladies there are many who, as wives and mothers, cannot be surpassed. But it has always been said that there will in any case be far more women than men in heaven; and, as in England, so in India, male students do not need to have laid before them as a text book for examination anything which does not tend to elevate. While the Madras University is about this kind of examination, why do they not give the "Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale" or "Pericles"? The latter is probably as genuine as "Troilus," and certainly not less racy.

Can it be that there are no qualified examiners in India who, in addition to their acquirements, have the natural gift of common sense?

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, October 22nd; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, October 21st.

THE Times correspondent, telegraphing from Rangoon on the 8th inst., tells us that the expedition to Mandalay had been fairly launched, the troops from Bengal having been transferred to the flotilla steamers without landing.

The Bengal Brigade, about 3,000 strong, started on Sunday for Thayetmyo, where they will land, but pitch no camp. The siege train and floating batteries leave on Monday.

Letters of November 2 from Mandalay state that when King Thebaw received the ultimatum he summoned a council of all the great officials and asked their advice. M. Haas was invited to the palace for the council, and, with other Frenchmen, is taking an active part in the negotiations. M. Haas, it is stated, has advised the Burmese to yield now, and at a future period they might receive French assistance from Tonquin, which is now impossible. It is certain that M. Haas has renewed his intrigues at Mandalay.

Subsequently to the meeting of the council King Thebaw issued orders to his generals to have soldiers ready for immediate fighting. Reinforcements were sent to Minhla.

Alarm is felt for the safety of the four flotilla steamers at Mandalay. There is great excitement among the Burmese in Rangoon. The Burmese Government have removed the pilots on the Upper Irrawaddy.

If the reply to the ultimatum is unfavourable, the Minhla forts will probably be bombarded on November 15.

THAT Thebaw's reply is both evasive and unfavourable, later news shows. We give the abstract of it, telegraphed yesterday from Rangoon to the Times verbatim, it being the pièce justificative of the war:—

The purport of the Burmese Government's reply to the British ultimatum is unsatisfactory in respect of the first and second demands—those referring to the decree against the Bombay and Burma Company.

The answer is that if the corporation will present a humble petition the King will consider its case, as he wishes to encourage foreign traders. That being so, there is no need for further discussion or negotiations respecting their two demands.

To the third demand—namely, that a Resident shall be placed at Mandalay, with a guard, and having access to the King without humiliating ceremonies—the answer is that the last Resident went away of his own accord some years ago, and there has been none at Mandalay since. The British are welcome to put a Resident at Mandalay again, under the same conditions as formerly.

This reply avoids, or tacitly refuses, the stipulation for an armed guard with the Resident, for the Resident's honourable reception, and for his access to the King.

To the fourth demand the answer says that Upper Burma, as an independent State, must settle her own external affairs; and she cannot agree to commit any control of such affairs to the Viceroy of India without previous reference to other friendly countries, such as France, Italy, and Germany.

To the fifth demand—namely, that the trade to Upper Burma and China should be protected—the Burmese Government replies that it is and always has been favourable to such trade, and traders have only to apply to it to obtain protection and assistance as heretofore.

The reply is very lengthy.

FROM Pishin we learn with great satisfaction that good progress is being made in the construction of the Railway, and in the fortification of the Frontier. We only fear lest the various forts should be too far apart. The Railway will reach the Quetta plateau in six weeks.

THE work of the Telegraph Department seems to have been beyond all praise. Orders to procure material were met with the reply, that it was already collected, and all needful arrangements made. Sufficient material is stored at Quetta to carry the line to Herat, if necessary. We have more than once urged the claims of the Department to liberal treatment. We agree with the Times correspondent:—

The officers of the Department have reasonable cause for complaint, and the Government should take into serious consideration the claims of a body by whom they are so well served.

THE same correspondent gives us an emphatic warning as to the anxiety of the Natives regarding the result of the forthcoming English elections, and the deplorable results which may be expected to ensue, if it is clearly brought before them that their best interests are to be dealt with in a see-saw fashion, owing to the accidental circumstance which English political party happens, in an election largely depending on domestic matters, to obtain a majority.

THE Viceroy in his tour has visited Delhi, Ulwar, and other places, and is now at Ajmere.

THE Somprokash, "writing sarcastic," as Artemus Ward would have said, thus delivers itself on the topic of retrenchment:—

Probably the Government has learnt its retrenchment policy in this country. When any Native family is in debt reduction is made in the table expenses, and less care is taken of the sick. But there is no reduction in the outlay on pujas, or on the marriages of sons and daughters. Our Government follows a similar policy. A good deal of money is spent on the hill residences of Provincial rulers and of the Viceroy, but no fault is found. There are several unnecessary appointments in the Army, but they are not to be abolished. Retrenchment is to be made in the General, Education, and Public Works Departments. The country will greatly suffer by this policy. The stoppage of public works will enhance the misery and the sufferings of the people. We hope Government will be mindful of the impending danger and give up luxurious habits. Those who cannot work without going to the hills need not come out to this country. There are many Englishmen who reside in Calcutta during the summer.

THE Native papers were exercised as to the then probable, now certain, encounter in Burma. The Indian Spectator says:—

A storm is brewing in North Burma. Whether it will be blown over, or burst into a hurricane, it is impossible yet to say. King Thebaw, according to the latest reports, is said to be behaving most discourteously towards the British authorities, and has no inclination whatever to listen to their dignified remonstrances. The news is really ominous. And it is impossible to say to what limits that inebriate potentate may carry his defiance. For the present it would seem that the French difficulty is removed, thanks to the firm action of Lord Salisbury. So that there only remains the solution of the problem how to protect the British subjects, who appear to have been unjustly treated. It is much to be hoped that the Government of Lord Dufferin may feel their way to the solution of the difficulty with extreme caution and judgment. One rash step to which Lord Dufferin may perhaps be committed by the hierarchy of the Foreign Office which surrounds him, and the matter will be so complicated as to make it impossible to get out of it without another war. We earnestly appeal to his Excellency the Viceroy to weigh well the consequences of armed hostility with the semi-barbarous king.

THE Pioneer rightly enough points out the danger arising from Russian intrigues in the Herat province, and shows how Alikhanoff's "moves" are just those which might be expected from an Asiatic. The so-called Governor of Penjdeh tried, first to seduce, then to intimidate, the Jamshidi Chief, Yalantush Khan, threatening to send as many men as were needful to bring him in as a prisoner. "Of course," says our contemporary, "so long as our officers are in North-Western Afghanistan the Chahar Aimaks are not likely to declare for Russia, but we have here an indication of the policy which will be adopted by the Czar's officers once the coast is clear. We do not see how such intrigues can be prevented, even when the boundary question has been settled. Russia is sure to advance sooner or later, and she will first pave her way by tampering with the Amir's subjects. It is just as well to remember this and to keep our powder dry; as we have so often insisted there can be no permanency in any arrangement, treaty, or otherwise, with a Power so unscrupulous as that which now faces us in Central Asia."

THE Russian object is to impress the tribes with an idea of their superiority in power to the English, and thus to overawe them, gold not being spared to seduce the more influential. The escort of our Commission is, like that of the Russian Commission, limited to 100 men. We shall be honest; but what of the Russians? Will not Kühlberg's escort be nearer 1,000—all the surplus being, of course, put down as "camp followers"? Is not "brag," a game at which two can play? What, in Asia, does it mean but "prestige"? Can any one estimate how much, in our rivalry with Russia, we have lost by persistently not playing this said game?

SPEAKING of the correspondence to which the second letter of the "Hindu Lady" in the Times of India gave rise, the Indu Prakash thus sums it up:—

Among the correspondents on the "Hindu Lady's" letter two deserve special mention. The "Hindu," in the Times of India and the "Shade of Manu," in the Bombay Gazette. The former suggests an improvement in the marriage ritual by postponing the laja homa ceremony to the time of consummation. It is the laja homa which makes the tie indissoluble, and if it is postponed it will doubtless alleviate one great inconvenience of early marriage, viz., virgin widowhood. To that extent the reform is certainly worthy of attention, and we commend it to the notice of our Hindu leaders. But there are other inconveniences of early marriage, such as the hindrance to education, which cannot be cured except by an absolute abolition of the custom. The only remedy is to raise the limit of marriageable age of both males and females, and this must be done either by the tacit consent of the society or by legislation. The "Shade of Manu" warns the Gazette against a disposition to underrate the evils, and shows how such writing gives a handle to the opponents of social reform to decry the reformers. The Gazette has, we think, taken by far the most judicious view of the question, not underrating, nor oversteating, the case, but taking stock of the actual state of things. For our part, we are not disposed to regret even coloured writings of opponents, as, in a matter of this sort, every contribution to the discussion from different standpoints must be welcome.

THE Bombay Guardian expresses satisfaction at the Bombay Gazette having coming out boldly in advocacy of the non-recognition of child-marriage. We have, it says, for years insisted that the Government should recognise nothing as marriage in which the marrying parties were not of marriageable age, and in which they did not voluntarily make the compact. We have not been singular in this opinion. Mr. Judge Pinhey's decision shows that what was needed was that some one should break the ice. We earnestly hope that when the minimum age at which parties may be regarded as intelligently marrying is fixed it will not be below fourteen for the female.

THE Bangalore Spectator is informed that a Native gentleman, a resident of the Civil and Military Station, has offered a gold medal for the best essay in English, written by a Native of India, on the subject, "Are the Natives fit to govern their country, and if they are not fit what measures should be adopted to train them?" This subject is so wide, and can be approached from so many sides, that it will certainly attract competitors from all parts of India, as much, perhaps, for the sake of airing individual opinions or crotchets as for that of the medal. We are glad not to be one of the judges, though we imagine that there can be but one answer to the first question.

A RECENT change in the India Office has not given satisfaction in India. We read in the Civil and Military Gazette:—

The appointment of Geographical Assistant to the Secretary of State for India, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Trelawney Saunders, has been given to Mr. C. E. D. Black, late Private Secretary to Sir W. Vernon Harcourt. This is how appointments in the India Office are usually given; not to men qualified by the experience that can only be gained in India, but to somebody whose only recommendation is that politicians at home are interested in him. The Indian Survey Department could supply a far better man than either Mr. Trelawney Saunders or Mr. Black. No wonder Mr. Lessar has had it so much his own way in London.

WE understand that the Hon. G. Napier is to be attached to the Intelligence Department of the War Office. This is as it should be—no better selection could be made.

WE are informed that Sir Frederic Goldsmid has accepted the post of Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society, vacant by the lamented death of Mr. Vaux.

THOSE who have read with attention the remarks of Mr. Colquhoun on Chinese progress will probably not be surprised to read the following of the 5th from Vienna:—

In an article on Burma, the clerical Vaterland remarks:—

England, Russia, and France, from their different standpoints, are all trying to secure ascendancy over China; but what will it profit the world if these nations succeed in scaring the 400,000,000 of Chinese out of their conservatism and bringing them under the influence of European ideas? China is learning to make use of her coal-fields, which are the largest on earth, and of her immense beds of iron. What, if with her cheap labour, she some day begins to enter into industrial competition with Europe? To us this possibility seems by no means remote. The day when, under European direction, a factory is set up in China to manufacture with Chinese coal iron goods, of which Europe and America have now a monopoly, will mark the beginning of a great change in the world, a change which we cannot consider with equanimity.

WE have received the following from that very deserving charity, the Booksellers' Provident Institution:—

THE old difficulty of retirement in the Madras Army has again come to the front.

The senior officers (says the Correspondent of an Indian contemporary) are all ready and willing to go for what they are worth, without being paid a farthing more. You know that they have a claim on the colonel's allowance and on Lord Clive's Fund—that, in short, the aggregate of these two things represents what the officers are worth. Then let an actuary decide what the present value of these things is, and the senior officers will, ninety-nine hundredths, if not the whole hundred, accept at once. But though they ask for nothing more than they are worth, they will go for nothing less; and Government is, above all things, mistaken in supposing that, at all events as regards the married portion, these officers will relinquish Lord Clive's Fund, which means no less than one-third of a widow's pension. Government does not seem able to understand, but you will well know, that a deprivation, and that is a very heavy one, which would fall wholly and solely on an officer's family, he himself having personally no share in it, is the last thing he will risk.

Briefly stated (adds the Army and Navy Gazette), the matter comes to this. Senior officers decline to retire on the pension of £750 after thirty-two years' service, and Government refuses to grant them any increase of pension between thirty-two and thirty-eight years. They naturally elect to hold on for the full term, and then retire on their off-reckonings. The effect is to block the list and render military rank ridiculous, owing to the number of field officers employed in positions which could be more economically and more efficiently performed by officers of inferior rank.

This is so true, and the ultimate loss to the State by practically forcing officers to "wait on for their off-reckonings" so heavy, that any Secretary for India, who, despite the complexity of military circumlocution, would take the matter in hand, and settle it once for all, would do a great service to the revenues of India.

WHAT are the privileges of the senior wife amongst Muslims? According to a case in the Bombay papers, it consists in having the right to assist her spouse in tying together the legs of a junior rival, hanging her to a rafter, stripping her, and branding her with hot irons. Thus to treat the more recent acquisition in the way of wives could not be otherwise than pleasant and entertaining, especially when you yourself heat the irons which you hand to your husband to enable him to leave his mark,

Chit Chat.

THE Bishop of Bombay has raised an acrimonious discussion in the Press, owing to the circumstance that he lodged an objection to the marriage of Surgeon Willis and Miss Langley, on the ground that neither party resided in the parish!

It has been decided to construct extensive harbour works at Pondicherry at a cost of 21,000,000 francs, but there is a hitch as to the money. Surely the French Republic has enough on its hands just at present, without indulging in expensive engineering operations?

THE law has decided that a marriage performed by a layman, provided the parties believe the latter to be a priest, is legal. So in future melodramas are perforce shorn of their more attractive "situations."

A NATIVE chief, rejoicing in the name of the Rajah of Jashpur, has taken a lesson from the fanatics of this country, and has forbidden his subjects to be vaccinated, at the risk of receiving twelve stripes. So the unhappy people have the alternative of smallpox or a beating. How contagious is folly! In another instance a zemindar in Bengal most persistently refused to give the imprimatur of his sanction to vaccination. Fortunately, however, while thus obdurate, one of his children caught the smallpox and died, whereupon he at once took alarm and had all the survivors vaccinated. His example was at once followed by the humble classes, and the district was rendered safe. Would that a few anti-vaccinators would find their families decimated with a like result.

POOR Mr. Grant Duff has come in for an immense mass of abuse, but is it not rather overdoing it to accuse him of bringing dishonour upon the British Government? What, too, can be said of the bad taste and indecency, in laying at the door of the Government over which he presides, the charge of shameless mendacity and barefaced hypocrisy, lying, cheating, subornation of perjury, conspiracy to convict innocent men, violation of law on behalf of a pet criminal of the Government, and much more in the same strain. Surely the "Indian Vigilance League" should moderate its language, at least if it expects respectable men to join its ranks.

SIMLA has been in a paradise of bliss. The great masquerade hall of the season, talked of for weeks, is now a thing of the past. The Pioneer account of the dresses and personages at the gay assemblage will be read with interest. Juluka, arrayed in silks of surpassing richness and beautiful colouring, harmonising admirably in all details; a lovely Duchess of Devonshire, as Incredible, that would have graced any ballroom in Europe; a Mascotte and Madame Favart, whose appearance on the stage would have delighted the most blasé audience; a Portia, serenely graceful; a matchless lot of White China; a charming, tricky Soubrette; a pretty Foundling; Folly, with her bells jingling as she walked; a dainty Nancy Lee; a Daisy and Snowdrop fair to see; a sweet Cherry Ripe; and many others won our admiration. There were also characters from Patience and the Mikado, who looked even better than when on the stage. The dresses of the lords of creation were of the usual kind; an Albanian peasant and a Neapolitan fisherman were, perhaps, the most picturesque. We had a Chang of height so commanding that he towered above the head of even a gigantic Mandarin; a sailor or two, who looked as if ready for a hornpipe; a Roger Bontemps, who seemed to have walked out of an old picture; cavaliers in all the glories of ruffles and lace; a bloodthirsty-looking Patan; and a Bedouin Chief, doubtless mourning the death of the Mahdi. A Patience quadrille, with "Artillery officers instead of Dragoons, was danced, Lady Jane being the ruling spirit."

LIEUTENANT F. ST. G. TUCKER has died at Mussooree from hydrophobia.

A PRIVATE at Bangalore taking a carbine, "potted" away at everyone near him; fortunately he was a bad shot and missed every soul, save a poor little Mussulman girl who was hit by a stray bullet. Finally the savage monster was brought to his senses by a shot from a man who thought it better to kill than be killed.

BOMBAY has been the scene of some fine polo play, to witness which Natives and ladies mustered in great force. The winning team hail from Haiderabad, and are such fine masters of the craft that it is said "it will take a tremendous lot to beat them."

"You have a fine set of teeth," said a young subaltern to a veteran Colonel whom he saw attacking the viands with unwonted eagerness. "So they ought to be," was the somewhat startling reply—"they cost me twenty-five guineas!"

COLONEL E. R. C. BRADFORD, K.C.S.I.,—is he not entitled to the prefix of "Sir" in virtue of being a Knight Commander of the most Exalted Order of the Star of India? Alas, what is fame?

THE last "exuberant eccentricity" of the Salvation Army, says a correspondent in the Times of India, is the scratching of texts on the fine Buddhist Caves at Kennerly. Well may it be asked "Cannot Government protect grand old historical monuments from the vandalism of religious fanatics?"

SIR MADHAVA RAO points out with truth that the abolition of the Indian Council would leave the Secretary of State an "unrestrained Autocrat." "Improve, therefore," says he, "but do not abolish."

"We are living in a grand and wondrous age," remarked a railway-passenger to a stranger who occupied the seat beside him. "Invention is rampant everywhere." "Yes," said his companion, "that's about what I observed to a witness in a lawsuit against me recently; there are more liars to the square-yard now than there used to be to the acre."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

NEW INDIA, OR, INDIA IN TRANSITION.*

This volume seems to be the outcome of a not very discriminate adoration, in matters political, in so far as they affect India, of Lord Ripon, in matters religious (or rather anti-religious) of Auguste Comte. The moral of the book is that we should, to all intents and purposes, scuttle out of India, where we are aliens, do not, and scarcely can, cotton to the Natives, and so on. There is too much of the modern India tone about Mr. Cotton's remarks.

He is far too prone to dwell on the—according to him—approaching downfall of British rule in India. "There can be no doubt (p. 8) that English rule in its present form cannot continue." Yet he expects "the leaders of what I have ventured to call a national movement" will not lead India any more to "break from its connection with England than it will from the Hindoo or Mahomedan periods of its history." This analogy we wholly fail to see. Nor is it consistent with the author's remark that of all conquerors we have the least affinity with the modes of thought of the Natives of India. In this opinion he has, indeed, the concurrence of the highest possible authority, the late Nawab Sir Salar Jung, who, speaking of the strong feeling against us, thus expressed himself (p. 72, n). "That none of our predecessors ever were so utterly foreign to the country as we are; that with all their faults they settled among and amalgamated themselves with the people, which we, with all our virtues, could never do. This (he seems to think) is the most insuperable of all the objections against our rule."

This unquestionable difference of national feeling is assuredly not greater than that which existed between the Normans and the Saxons, races which, nevertheless, amalgamated in a couple of centuries. In India we do not expect amalgamation. Yet a far closer association between the two races may be brought about, in a great measure, though not alone, by female influence.

Our author (p. 130) looks complacently forward to the time when we shall "get a month's notice" to leave our situation in India. He tells us that it would not be difficult for England, on the withdrawal of her own standing army, to secure treaty rights for India from the European Powers. Such rights would be the easier to negotiate for if it were seen that England were honestly giving up its policy of self-aggrandisement.

However excellent may be the intentions of anyone who can thus write, we must strongly object to his sentiments. We do not, any more than our author, regard India as a mere nursery for civilians and military men. But it is hard to argue with anyone to whom the prospect of Russian aggression is a bogey, and the permanence of "British rule in India" a phantom. Let Mr. Cotton read Mr. Wilson's excellent article on this very subject in the November number of the National Review. Mr. Wilson writes from personal experience as to the advantages which settled government, and a, generally speaking, just, administration have conferred on one district, that of Sirsa. "At first," he tells us, "land had practically no value, although the assessment per acre was merely nominal, and there were no occupancy rights of tenants to encumber the land and reduce the value of the proprietary right; but as population increased and cultivation developed, land rapidly rose in value. In 1850 the average selling price of land was only threepence per acre, in 1870 it was a shilling, in 1876 five shillings, and in 1880 eight shillings an acre. . . . Land can hardly be got anywhere for less than ten shillings an acre, and the average value of the land to the proprietors must be at least twelve shillings per acre—a price which gives the gross value of the land of the district to its 8,000 proprietors as over a million sterling, whereas fifty years ago they could not have got a thousand pounds for their rights."

* "New India, or, India in Transition." By H. J. S. Cotton, Bengal Civil Service. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co. 1885.

Again:—

"So secure has the tract become that the whole administration, criminal, civil, and revenue, of the district of 3,000 square miles, with its population of over a quarter of a million, has until recently been managed by a single European officer, with five subordinate magistrates and less than 400 police, with not a single soldier within eighty miles of him." Is Mr. Cotton prepared to dispute Mr. Wilson's assertions? If not, do not the facts speak for themselves?

We are not a little amused at our author's denunciation (pp. 60-1) of our expenditure on public works. Does he know that no less an authority than General Strachey has said that railways alone are worth forty millions a-year to India? Are not railways "so-called reproductive public works?" And will he tell us how the public works of our predecessors were paid for? Not, it is true, in rupees, but in human lives. How many people died in order that the Taj, or the magnificent buildings at Futtchepore Sikri, should be erected? Were the bunds and tanks in Mogul times constructed as famine relief works?

One cannot help wishing that Mr. Cotton had, instead of theorising, looked a little more to practical matters. India always has, as yet, been under dominion of a more or less "alien" character. "India for the Indians" is not a bad electioneering cry. But has any Government done, or would any other Government, do for India what we have done? The talkative Baboo and his supporters may not unprofitably ponder the question whether, by endeavouring to stir up discontent with the present régime, by presaging its early extinction, they may not be aiding to accelerate, so far as may lie in their—not, after all, very great—power, the advent of a rule which will assuredly not be more favourable than the present to their aspirations in the direction of what they may be pleased to call "self-government."

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

The present number of this excellent magazine contains less than usual of matter specially applicable to Indian readers. Colonel Malleon's "Prince Eugene of Savoy" is continued to the well-known and sanguinary battle of Cassano, in August, 1705. Colonel Furse's article on "The Staff of the Army in Peace and War" will be appreciated for its clear definition of the duties of the various departments, by every professional reader. When we know that the "division of labour" has been carried so far that it takes a dozen or so of workmen to make a pin, and that thus alone pins can be made with the greatest practical economy of labour, and, therefore, of money, it is not premature to insist on a more precise division of labour in the Army, whether or not employed in field operations. It is difficult to reconcile one's self to the new fangled title of "General of Communications," however accurately the phrase may define such an official's duties. We do not call the Prime Minister "General Manager of the Government," though he is so in fact. "Quartermaster-General" is well understood, and the proposed change of designation seems both questionable and cumbrous. (By the way, "Deputy Assistant and Quartermaster-General," on p. 38, is obviously a misprint for "Deputy Adjutant, &c.")

The article—continued from a previous number—on the Military and Naval Knights of Windsor, is interesting, both historically, and as showing how far the original objects of the foundation (namely to provide for "the valiant soldiers as happened in their old age to fall into poverty and decay, poor knights, weak in body, and indigent") have been observed. It might be instructive to get a return of the age, state of health, private means, &c., of the present knights. As to medical examinations, it is within our own knowledge that an officer was passed for the Indian service on no better test than the inquiry whether he could see the doctor's fist placed before his eyes, and feel it when used to "punch" his chest.

We fear that this "charity" has been terribly misapplied. As Major Archer says, "In all ages there have always been persons who have maintained themselves in luxury, or, at any rate, ease, by the simple process of administering the charities of others."

One cannot but deeply regret that, as would seem to be the case the public should require, as a sort of condition of their support, the erection by societies, ostensibly associated solely for the diffusion of Scriptural knowledge, and for missionary enterprise, of palatial buildings in such parts of London as Salisbury-square, Queen Victoria-street, and, to cap all, Northumberland-avenue, and we are tempted to inquire how many of the poor peasants and workmen whose pennies and sixpences are coerced, by a telling pulpit oration, into the plate or bag, are aware what percentage of their hardly earned contributions goes to build, and sumptuously furnish, magnificent "offices," and to pamper "Clerical and Lay Secretaries."

Dr. Dickinson's brief article on the Royal Naval School shows how much really useful and valuable work has been, and still is being, done there. The list of old Naval schoolmen is a strong one, as we all know. We read, as a touching incident, that "General Kent, when quartered at Woolwich, marched his regiment, the 77th (now transmogrified into the 2nd Battalion Middlesex Regiment) down to his old school, and, on arriving there, the band struck up 'After many roving years.'"

The Captain's Yarns continue to be interesting; and the "New Inventions suitable for Army and Navy" contain a description of a patent cork and floating fabric which would seem to imply that everyone is born to be hanged—assuredly they cannot be drowned.

THE JOURNAL OF INDIAN ART.*

This beautifully got-up and executed series owes its origin to the enlightened desire of the Government of India to diffuse a knowledge of, and, by the exhibition of specimens, to call general attention throughout Europe and India to, the various phases of Indian art. In the words of the Preface, "to establish in all parts of the world in which an interest is taken in the art manufactures of India a better knowledge of the various types now existing, with a view both of increasing the demand for them, and of facilitating their supply through the agency of traders in Oriental wares, to whom it is anticipated that the information will be useful."

The collection before us seems, as far as it has gone, eminently calculated to fulfil these objects. The specimens, which have been chiefly drawn by pupils of the Mayo School of Art at Lahore, under the direction of its well-known and able principal, Mr. J. L. Kipling, are on a sufficiently large scale to enable the reader to see, and, indeed, a competent workman to imitate, the delicate details of the patterns. To say that these drawings, elaborate as they are, have been splendidly reproduced in photo-lithography by Mr. Griggs is hardly saying all that we wish to convey.

More especially we would call attention to the exquisite specimens of Jeypoor enamel at Plate 13, the Powder horn (Plate 18), and yet more, as a veritable triumph of photo-lithography, the marvellous realism achieved in the reproduction, in Part 6, of the gold and silver enamelled work known as Bidri ware, so called because first practised when Bidar (Bedur) was the capital of a Hindu monarchy. (It is sad to learn, from the appreciative description by Mr. Mukarji, that the manufacture of this beautiful ware is on the decline.) Indeed, there is not an illustration in the work which is not a model of clearness, and from which a replica might not be made were adequate artistic skill at hand.

There is scarcely any article in the whole Peninsula into the manufacture of which art, and often art in a very high form, has not entered. The art treasures of the country are, as may be conceived, illimitable; and it will be long ere collectors and museums do much more than gather sand on the shores of so vast an ocean. From every quarter we have at least some specimens of the indigenous workman's skill, one number (No. 2) being, as a special record of the success of the Jeypoor Exhibition, devoted to the art manufactures of Rajputana and other Native States.

The letterpress is much above the average excellence of letterpress on art subjects, being written by gentlemen confessedly masters of their respective subjects, and—a real blessing—free, so far as we can see, from "art-fads." Much crops up which is most valuable, much which is exceedingly curious. "A considerable amount," says Mr. Kipling (page 8), "of elaborately chased copperware seems to owe its vogue to the state of the English custom house duties. No chased silver ware may be imported into England except under a heavy duty, so that Cashmeree artisans make teapots, claret-jugs, biscuit jars, salvers, goblets, &c., in elaborately chased copper, which are sent home to be electroplated. No European process of chasing or stamped ornamentation gives so much richness for the same amount of money, and it is not surprising that Cashmere gold and silver plate of large size and imposing aspect, which, however, is only silvered or gilded copper, is often to be seen on the sideboards of retired Anglo-Indians. Mr. Kipling has also contributed other papers of interest, such as, on "Indian Architecture of To-day," one of the illustrations to which amusingly contrasts, in successive plates, a drawing of a building, grotesque in its ugliness, to show "architecture as understood by the Public Works Department," with an unpretentious—yet varied and well-balanced—"House at Dampur," in illustration of the same art "as understood by Native gentry." This subject is further dealt with, in No. 8, by Captain R. C. Temple, who calls attention to the invincible reluctance of the mistri to work from drawn plans, which merely confuses him, and assuredly do not improve the quality of his work. "The Natives of India do not build from detailed plans, or from anything more than a general idea, outlined in the sand from day to day."

In the same number, the last issued, is a description by Sir George Birdwood of that wonder of the world, the Taj at Agra,

* "Army and Navy Magazine," November, 1885. Allen and Co.

* "The Journal of Indian Art." Nos. 1 to 8. W. Griggs, Elm House, Peckham. 1884-5.

which, well-known as is the Taj, our readers will find worthy of attentive perusal. Sir George points out the vast inferiority of buildings at Delhi, which bear the impress of 17th century European design, when compared with the delicate tracing attributable to the Native workmen. The Taj "is," he says, "the tomb of Meumtaz Mahal, and it could be nothing else; and surely it is the very highest praise of architecture, that it should at once transparently and feelingly express the needs it fulfils." It is lamentable that, in laying out the garden à l'Européenne, with cypresses, &c., we should have managed to obscure even the least of the beauties of this marvellous structure.

Dr. Hendley, the "working horse" at the Jeypoor Exhibition, contributes valuable notes (No. 2) well illustrated, on "Enamelling and Industrial Art in Rajpootana and Central India;" and, that female aid may not be wanting, Mrs. Rivett Carnac reprints her account of "An Afternoon Ramble in an Indian Bazaar," first written for the columns of the Englishman.

It is long since we enjoyed such an art feast, and we congratulate Mr. Griggs very heartily on the admirable manner in which he has performed his most important share in the production of the work.

THE RIVERS OF THE VEDAS.*

No one would suppose that, under the above title, he would find, not only interesting and valuable remarks on the rivers mentioned in the Vedas, which writings evidently indicate the route taken by the Aryans when they entered Hindostan, but many hints of which we ought not, at the present moment, to be slow to avail ourselves. Yet so it is. It is worthy of notice that in few matters is the continuity of history more observable than in the permanency of lines of communication, even when the natural features of a country do not appear to necessitate the adoption of any particular route. No one who can realise what England was in Roman times will fail to perceive how even the railways have, if not at first, yet subsequently, followed, at least approximately, the course of the old Roman roads. In France, and, still more, in South Germany, the same is the case; and ancient roads might well receive from the strategist more notice than is usually accorded to them. "To stick to the old ways" seems, in this, as in other, matters, to have been a natural instinct. (As we mentioned not long ago, in noticing Mr. Hyde's "Royal Mail," the driver of the Bath coach would not avail himself, near Marlborough, of the new well-made road—though shorter than the old one—because his "fayther," as they say in Wiltshire, had always been in the habit of shaking his passengers nearly to death over the ruts which had previously formed an apology for a highway.) It is, therefore, of historical and political interest to investigate the ways by which, so many centuries ago, the Aryans, "from their ancient seats towards the East of the Caspian," found their way South Eastward. Naturally desiring, in an arid climate, to keep within reach of adequate water-supply, they followed rivers. When they came to mountainous regions, they had to find a passage (or, as we now call it, a "pass") in the usual way, by tracking a stream upwards to its source, and after crossing the crest of the mountain, by proceeding until another stream, flowing in the opposite direction, could be struck.

The "passes" through the mountains on the North-West Frontier have—notwithstanding "upheavals," to which Mr. Thomas (p. 13) refers—probably been, to all practical purposes, the same for many hundred years. Those of the greatest importance were, as they now are, the Khyber on the North, the Bolan on the South; intermediately, the Kurrum, and one to which Mr. Thomas draws attention, the Gomal. The two last are referred to in the text of the Vedas, and the Gomal deserves notice as "a pass of great importance, being the middle route from Hindustan to Afghanistan. . . . Immense caravans, consisting principally of Lohani Afghans, every spring traverse it westward from the Indus and adjacent countries." Kurrum was thought so important "that the most trusted lieutenant of each succeeding Sultan was (by the Moguls) appointed to the command of its central or dominating fort." What is being done to protect these passes, both running from Ghazni into our own territories? It will probably be neither in the Khyber nor in the Bolan that we shall have to encounter a hostile attack; but, unless we boldly advance, at the outlet of some "middle passage," which would enable an enemy to cut in half and to beat in detail an army cantoned so as to guard both these passes. Mr. Thomas has done good service in calling attention to these subjects. Where one ass has gone another can go; and we shall lose nothing, but, possibly, gain much, if we study somewhat closely the tracks (p. 23) which the Aryans found (and which, conceivably, a future Sikobeff might find) the easiest lines of approach to the fertile plains, and illimitable riches, of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1885.

THE PIONEER OF THE OVERLAND ROUTE.

THERE is nothing new in national ingratitude. Moses endured not a little of it, so that that meekest of men is recorded to have once lost his temper. Themistocles and Coriolanus were banished. Hannibal died in exile of poison administered by his own hand. Clive was treated "as though he had been a sheepstealer." The magnificent services of Warren Hastings were rewarded by ten years' trial and pecuniary ruin.

We do not for a moment intend to compare Thomas Fletcher Waghorn for eminence with any of the above. But we may recall the fact that it is now more than half a century since he submitted, through the Marine Board of Calcutta, proposals on the subject of an Overland Route, and since he was, in October, 1829, called on by Lord Ellenborough, then President of the Board of Control, to give effect to them by proceeding, at four days' notice, overland to Bombay, with despatches, reporting on the practicability of the Red Sea navigation for such a route.

A short notice of Lieutenant Waghorn's exertions, by his grand-nephew, printed in the excellent "Magazine for Australasia, Once a Month," deserves a few words, and brings to mind circumstances which are but too often forgotten.

Lieutenant Waghorn failed—how odd this sounds nowadays—in convincing people at home that the Red Sea was navigable! "The Government nautical authorities reported" the contrary. Fortunately the Pasha of Egypt—who had not, at that time, blossomed forth into a Khedive—was more practical than the practical English, and Waghorn managed to secure the potentate's entire confidence.

"Once," says he in a pamphlet, enumerating his achievements and claims, published shortly before his death in 1850, "in the enjoyment of the Pasha's friendship, I was enabled to establish mails to India, and to keep that service in my hands for four years." At the pressing solicitations of the East India and China Association, mails were eventually thus sent, but nothing contributed by the Government to the expenses already incurred in establishing the route.

To popularise this newly-opened way of travel, Lieutenant Waghorn had brought into being every facility for passengers, such as hotels, "horses, vans, and all the usual adjuncts" of English journeying. But, just when the prosperity of the new adventure had, to the inconceivable comfort of innumerable passengers, been assured, the Government gave the "monopoly of a chartered contract to an opulent and powerful company" (the P. and O.). Waghorn had disbursed his entire ancestral fortune of some £40,000, and was wholly unable to cope with such a giant, whose mere touch, like that of Polyphemus's rock, crushed so weak an Acis.

Extremus quamvis pervenit ad illum
Angulus e Saxo, totum tamen obruit Acin.

One would have imagined that the undoubted benefits which Waghorn had conferred on his country would in some degree have been recognised, if only pecuniarily. Dear to the feelings of an officer as is the honorific recognition, by his Sovereign, of whatever services he may have rendered—such recognition, we need hardly say, was denied Waghorn, though, had he been a foreigner, he would have had more decorations than his breast could have displayed—he might at least have expected that he would not be allowed to see himself and his family reduced to poverty, after expending their all in their country's service. Yet so it was. He received, it would seem, after long experiencing the hope deferred which maketh the heart sick, the promise of £6,000, to enable him to commence a route via Trieste. The results are so remarkable that they shall be given in his own words, taken from the last remonstrance addressed by him to the Government:—

In the winter of 1845-6, single-handed, and despite unparalleled and wholly unforeseen difficulties, I eclipsed on five trials out of six the long-organised arrangements of the French authorities, specially stimulated to all possible exertion, and supplied with unlimited means, by M. Guizot. On the first of the six occasions there arose the breaking down on the Indian Ocean of the steamer provided for me, thereby trebling the computed expenses through the delay; and when, startled by this excessive outlay, I hesitated to entail more, the Treasury and India House told me to proceed to do the service well and make out my bill afterwards. I did proceed. I did the service not only well, not only to the satisfaction of my employers, but in a manner that elicited the admiration of Europe. My rivals, to whom the impediments in my path were best known, were lowliest in their acknowledgments. I presented my bill. It was dishonoured.

This unexpected loss plunged Waghorn, who already owed £5,000, deeper into debt, and, in the end, he had to hand over to his creditors a small pension, which, in consideration of his shattered health, had been granted to him by the Government and the East India Company. He died in 1850, broken-hearted, and in very straitened circumstances. He left two sisters, who have from Government a pension of £50 each, which the Government of Victoria, on a representation recently made to them, promptly doubled, in recognition of Waghorn's services in establishing, not only the overland route, but steam communication from Singapore to Australia. Such has been the sole recognition accorded to a man, whose perseverance and disregard of apparently insuperable difficulties, were as remarkable as those services to his country which cannot be overrated, and the results of which are day by day more appreciated. One penny in the pound on the sum gained by the P. and O. Company from the passage-money of travellers by the Overland Route, assigned for the benefit of its Pioneer, would have placed Waghorn in fairly easy circumstances.

No man is a prophet in his own country. Waghorn had yet one merit, not likely to be recognised in England in Palmerston's lifetime, but which has not escaped due acknowledgment abroad. He was the projector of the Suez Canal. Speaking at Paris, at a banquet given on the occasion of the opening of that work, M. de Lesseps not only brought forward this fact, but stated that it was from Waghorn's plans that he had worked. "The very plans that were scoffed at when first mooted were those which, in my position as engineer of the works, have enabled me to carry them through."

The Suez Canal Company erected a statue at the Suez end of the Canal, with a most just and complimentary inscription, and something of the same kind is spoken of here. This is right enough, though a poor atonement for neglect during his lifetime, and for nearly forty years afterwards. After all, à quoi bon? So many insignificant people have statues, that not to have one is almost an honour. When Lord Castlereagh attended the Congress at Vienna, he was the only Ambassador who, amidst a blaze of decorations, wore none. "Ma foi," said Talleyrand, "c'est bien distingué."

Painful it is to remember that Honour's voice, so silent in his lifetime, can no longer provoke his silent dust. May we do better in future! May we recognise such merit as Waghorn's, pioneering the way to the victories of peace, when again we meet it!

THE BURMA EXPEDITION.

At the present moment, when the Expedition to coerce Thebaw, and, in all probability, to annex Upper Burma, is on its road to Mandalay, readers may like to be reminded of the nature of the country through which our troops will have to pass. The greater part of British Burma may, roughly speaking, be said to consist of the delta of the Irrawaddy, and of the alluvium brought down by its affluents. Ascending the streams, we reach the hills whence they flow. It has been already stated by us that our frontier, marching with that of Burma Proper, is purely arbitrary, and that the latter consists of a territory some 540 miles in length and 420 in breadth, in area about 190,000 square miles; or, let us say roughly, about twice as much as the area of the United Kingdom.

For the first 200 miles from the frontier General Prendergast will find a level country, a good deal intersected by rivers—the most advantageous points of transit being doubtless blocked by stockades. For the next 300 miles the land, gradually rising, is undulating, we might almost say hilly; beyond that distance—say about 600 miles from Thayetmyo—mountainous and craggy, with dense forests. It is probable that, if the political officer attached to the force be thoroughly competent, and be allowed free hand, the expedition will be among the most bloodless ever undertaken.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the Overland Mail are, from Bombay, October 30th; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, October 28th.

THE first active encounter between the British and Burmese took place on the Irrawaddy, on the 13th, and resulted in the capture, by the Kathleen, a launch of the Turquoise, of a Burmese war-boat. The Times correspondent telegraphs from Thayetmyo on the 14th:—

One of King Theebaw's steamers on the Irrawaddy, carrying a large quantity of ammunition, and manned by 200 men, has been captured by the launch Kathleen, armed with two howitzers, and commanded by Lieutenant French, of the Turquoise. The Burmese crew were driven overboard by the artillery fire of the launch Kathleen and of the Government steamer accompanying her. The British boarded the Burmese vessel after the engagement, and proceeded up the river.

TELEGRAPHING on the 15th, he further tells us:—

General Prendergast is on the frontier, fifteen miles above Thayetmyo. The Irrawaddy, with Colonel Sladen, has returned, having proceeded twenty miles up the river. Considerable Burmese preparations were observed. The steamer brings two large flats, which were captured at the same time as the Burmese steamer. One flat is laden with sandbags, and has vertical teak posts fixed in her. She was about to be sunk to obstruct the navigation when she was captured. The Camatito on board escaped by swimming ashore. The Camatito's papers, diaries, and plans of the forts were seized.

The capture of this steamer is important, as if the river were obstructed the expedition might have been much delayed. It also prevents the Burmese from moving troops and guns, and will have a good effect on the frontier districts, removing the idea from the Burmese mind of Theebaw's invincibility.

The Burmese retired to-day from some small posts on the frontier.

Three European and four Native regiments, with guns, are expected to-morrow.

The arrangements for the expedition so far are very satisfactory. The captured steamer, manned by a British crew, will accompany the forces as a transport. A determined resistance is probable at Menhla.

The weather is cool and the troops are healthy.

The Doowoon, with four flats, has arrived from Mandalay, having been allowed to leave, but she was heavily fired on during the passage down. An attempt to board her was repulsed.

Mr. E. Andreino and other Europeans are detained at Mandalay, where all was quiet on the 11th, but a palace revolution is expected.

THE French Press is still very wroth at our having dared to undertake an expedition against a sovereign "protected" by the glorious nation; but some of the journals, the Temps, for instance, and Freycinet's paper, the Télégraphe, think differently, and the latter does not mince words in plainly telling the French that they have well earned this political rap on the knuckles. It says, and it is worth while to weigh the words of so prominent a statesman—one, too, not always friendly to England—as Freycinet:—

For twenty years the English had been preparing for the annexation of Burma, and for that purpose had formed numerous relations with the country. They were waiting for a good opportunity of carrying out their scheme, probably the Sovereign's death or a palace revolution. The King, foreseeing the fate which threatened his dynasty, thought the best way of escape was to confront England with another European Power. A few of our countrymen who had just discovered Burma, offered the protectorate of France, and, with the thoughtlessness characterising our colonial policy, the Government ratified these proposals without considering the embarrassments which would result. An embassy came over, we gave it a brilliant reception, and a formal treaty was submitted to the Chambers. This was calling forth the attention of England, who can no more tolerate the interference of a European nation in the affairs of the Upper Irrawaddy than we can in Cambodia. It was the doom of King Theebaw, to whom an ultimatum was immediately addressed—this sovereign, relying on our support, and resolving to resist an army, which is invading his territory. . . . Let us hope this lesson, so unpleasant for our dignity, will profit us and cure us for a time of our mania of intervening everywhere and without occasion in affairs which we ill understand, and which to be properly handled require discretion and continuity of views.

THE Times hears from Paris, yesterday, that, by a decree of that date, M. de Bouteiller, Vice-Consul at Philadelphia, is appointed Vice-Consul at Mandalay, "in the place of M. Haas, placed on the reserve list on account of ill-health." As the Times says, it would evidently have been much better for King Theebaw, for England, and for M. Haas himself had his indisposition occurred six months sooner.

REPORTS, which continue to flow in, show that, though the distress in certain districts of Bengal, owing to the ravages of the floods, may be severe, it will not be nearly as bad as has been apprehended. In the twenty-four Pergunnahs, Hooghly, Nuddea, Jessore, and Moorshedabad, "a bumper winter crop" may be expected. In Midnapore, which was sorely devastated, relief is needed in three police districts only.

THE Lieut.-Governor of Bengal is about to visit Orissa, the scene of the late cyclonic devastation, and where, as we mentioned, the loss of life is estimated at 5,000. About 8,000 persons are employed on relief works.

THE following comes to the Times from Zulfiqar, dated last Thursday. We are glad to see that the Commissioners have got to work, though too late to do much this year. The summer will, even should no political obstacles arise, be far advanced ere they can hope to complete their task:—

The British and Russian Commissioners fixed the site of the first pillar this morning, at a spot about one and a-half mile to the north of the mouth of the Pass.

The Afghans then proceeded to build the pillar of demarcation, and performed the work satisfactorily.

First boundary pillar erected to-day, Ameer's representative being present and satisfied.

THE Serbian invasion of Bulgaria, prompted apparently by Russian intrigue, acting on factitious "earth-hunger," threatens to reopen the entire series of questions laid at rest by the Treaty of Berlin. It is pleasant to be able to say that the action of our present Government has been alike firm and conciliatory, though it has not been able to ward off gratuitous aggression. Even the cautious Temps had, the other day, an article praising, almost enthusiastically, Lord Salisbury's policy, and his earnest efforts to maintain peace.

WE are glad to see, from the Times telegrams, that the Indian Press agrees with us in "calling for an inquiry into the condition of the Government Telegraph Department, and the cause of the prevailing discontent among its officers. Certain remedial measures, proposed by the Indian Government, appear to be altogether inadequate; and it is to be hoped that no time will be lost in appointing an impartial committee to hold an inquiry, in India, into the grievances of one of the hardest worked and most harshly treated branches of the public service."

REUTER hears from Tashkend, under date November 12, that—

The former British Resident in Kashgar, who has been for some time in Yarkand, is about to proceed to Badakshan, in Eastern Turkestan.

Mr. Dalglish, the Oriental traveller, has left for Bhotan. A permanent British representative is expected to arrive shortly at Yarkand.

INDIA Council Remittances. Any real change in the rate at which these are disposed of seems as far off as ever. This week thirty-one lakhs were sold, the bulk at ls. 6½d. the rupee. Since the beginning of the financial year on April 1st, to last Wednesday, remittances had, says the Statist, been granted for Rs. 5,32,96,359, realising £4,132,312. To the corresponding date last year, Rs. 8,36,31,467, realising £3,844,570, had been disposed of

"It is a curious fact," says the Statesman, "that in the whole of the Berars not a single school exists for the education of European children."

In the course of the adjourned discussion at Simla on Major G. F. Young's proposals for the reorganisation of the Native Army, the expediency of raising the status of the Native officers was naturally mooted, and much debated, some speakers appearing disposed to prefer Native to European company officers. Colonel Menzies related a conversation he had with a Sikh who had lost his arm at Sobraon. "Saheb," said the old soldier, "you beat us, but it was not because you were better than we were. It was your boy officers, who were always in front of their men; while our Sirdars sat on horseback in rear, and only cried out 'Chullao! agi hurrao!'" It was just this leadership of European officers which the Sepoys best understood and appreciated.

SPEAKING of the promised Parliamentary inquiry into Indian affairs, the Indu Prokash says:—

The direct and indirect results of such an investigation need not be enumerated. Apart from any solid measures of practical reform which may ensue, the moral effect of the intervention of Parliament will be most salutary, and will itself be enough recompense for the arduous work of the inquiry. If a periodical Parliamentary inquiry should become a regular institution, as it was before 1858, our bureaucratic rulers will be impressed with a wholesome sense of responsibility, a feeling, the absence of which was regarded by the late Lord Beaconsfield as a special reason for making such an inquiry. Want of representation, and a general habit of submission to wrong, makes us willing victims of much undeserved oppression. A free comprehensive inquiry carried on under influential auspices will open the eyes of the British nation to our grievances, and will move it to give us redress. The light which such an inquiry is sure to throw on "the secret and obscure recesses of the Indian Bureau" will lead to a better understanding between England and India, and result in mutual advantage.

WITH reference to the coming elections, constituencies may profitably mark and inwardly digest a speech of Sir C. Warren, who, though coming forward as a Radical quand même, emphasises, as every one who has been in them must do, the value—in a purely commercial point of view, if in no other—of our Colonies. Needless to remark that what he says applies with tenfold force to India:—

He described his mission and how he carried it out, and said that we should endeavour to draw our Colonies towards us. One thing was certain, either our Colonies would slip away from us or draw into closer contact. It was quite a certainty with those who went to the Colonies that trade followed the flag. They were told, and he believed it to be perfectly true, that one Englishman in our Colonies bought as much from this country as twenty Englishmen under a foreign flag, and therefore it was most desirable for the trade of this country that we should endeavour to draw our Colonies closer. He was not in favour of any aggressive policy. He was not in favour of extending our territories except where absolutely necessary, but what they had to do was to govern well those Colonies we now possessed. If one of our Colonies—say South Africa—were taken from us it would be equal to putting out of employment one of our large towns, such as Sheffield or Leeds. The colonists often said that we thought too much of our own internal affairs and not sufficiently of them, and even the most loyal Englishman out in the Colonies at times got discontented and disheartened. There should be a settled policy, irrespective of party, with regard to all who were out beyond the United Kingdom. The difficulty at the present time was this, when our parties went in or out there was a change in colonial policy; and then in the Colonies there was a similar change.

THE quarantine imposed in Egypt on homeward bound Indian steamers never had much raison d'être; we are glad that it no longer exists, the Postal authorities having notified that the regular mail packet service between Brindisi and Alexandria, which has been suspended since September last owing to quarantine restrictions in Egypt, will be resumed in connection with the homeward mails from India, China, and Australia leaving Alexandria on the 12th inst., and the outward mails to be despatched from London on the 20th inst., and the transit across Egypt will be by railway as usual, instead of through the Suez Canal. From the last-named date the mails from Cyprus and Beyrout will also be again forwarded via Alexandria.

Good news for people with tender skins! Says the Planters' Gazette:—

Here is a wrinkle which will save the Anglo-Indian the fearful language by which he loses his whole soul. A bottle of bromine left in a closed room all night with the stopper out destroys all infection and insect life. It is far more effectual than the fumes of burning sulphur.

An officer on the Afghan Boundary Commission writes to the Civil and Military Gazette from Kuhsan on Russian paper. Surely, as he says, Indian paper mills could afford to sell paper there cheaper than the Russians. But we have so long neglected the transfrontier commerce that the Russ now has the start of us in many things besides paper.

OUR fair readers will be glad to hear, on the authority of the Pioneer, that the Maharajah of Kashmir has abolished the Rawanagi, or twenty per cent. export duty, on shawls. This should lower the enormous prices charged for them, though the five rupees local tax on each piece of shawl, coupled with the heavy duty exacted on the material, "pushm," from which they are made, still remains a heavy impost.

THE Pioneer advocates the study of Turki; it should have its place "in the language outfit for the North-Western Frontier." The Calcutta Foreign Office is charged with "neglecting the best linguists in the country, and recruiting its politicals at random, with merely the formal test of a bookish examination." We are disposed to agree with our contemporary on both points. By the way, how many officers of the Afghan Boundary Commission know Turki? Rely on it, we shall find the Russians well armed in this as in other matters.

An article in the same journal, on "Trade with Tibet," gives some hints which our tea-growers may well take to heart. Our tea is not to the Bhutia taste; and Chinese tea is actually "imported through Tibet into Darjiling for the consumption of the Native inhabitants of the district," says no less an authority than Mr. Edgar.

THE fate of the Europeans at Mandalay inspires the gravest apprehensions. A month ago the Delhi Gazette's correspondent reported:—

An Englishman, who has known Mandalay for the last fifteen years, says he never saw it in such an excited state, and that he would be surprised at nothing which happened, so eager is Tinedah's party to push matters to extremities and force an immediate action. Tinedah's arrogance and cruelties, combined with our inaction, inspire confidence in his following.

In a very interesting letter from the Punjab frontier in the Madras Times, the provision of fodder for an advancing force is touched on—a subject of the utmost importance on a frontier in parts of which, during bad seasons, not a blade of grass is produced. We read:—

Stacks of grass have often been made by the Punjab Cavalry near their outposts on the Rajanpore frontier. The greater part of the grass is of a peculiar sort called "sen." It grows to a height of four or five feet, and is most nourishing; in fact, the Natives say it is as strengthening as corn. In the next Cabul war it would be quite worth the while of Government to make inquiries regarding this grass, as the Indus river runs close to this frontier, and grass could be easily floated down to Sukkur, pressed there or even at Rajanpur, and sent to the front.

THOSE of our readers who desire to know what a campaign in Burma really is, and what is the character of the country, should read Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma (W. H. Allen and Co.) of Colonel Laurie, who served throughout the second Burmese war, and who knows how to use the pen as well as the sword. Not only is the narrative very interesting, but the maps are excellently adapted to elucidate the operations now in progress.

It is with no little surprise, and even dismay, that we see the announcement that the siege train in Burma is delayed because no powder has been sent from Madras. And this, though, as we read in the Pioneer, received to-day, and as everyone acquainted with the North-Eastern Frontier knows, the artillery is specially fitted for stockade work. It has, indeed, been made unusually strong, for the express purpose of attacking stockades, "the experience of past Burma wars having shown its particular fitness" for this service. Is this to be a forecast of the management of the Indian Ordnance Department in future wars? Imagine such a thing occurring in face of a Russian army! They would not be lacking in powder or anything else. Can we wonder if Orientals hold us cheap when such disgraceful blunders habitually occur? Is this never to cease? It is the Crimean unroasted coffee mismanagement over again in a still more acute form. Then some poor incompetents were white-washed by a Commission of very dubious composition; but we doubt if the nation would be disposed to white-wash a Department which should send our troops, without powder, against the Russians.

THE cry would be, not "Whom shall we hang?" but, "Hang the lot!" In the present most flagrant case, whom are we to hang? Some one must be in fault. Not, to be sure, poor Mr. Grant Duff, who was, probably, not on the spot, and whom it would be rank heresy to accuse of busying himself about anything so practical as the despatch of an expedition; a word which does not, by the way, contain even one of the three indispensable R's. But, as above said, some one is to blame; and we shall be glad to hear what measures are being taken to punish him or them, and to prevent the possibility of the recurrence of such a scandal.

Chit Chat.

THE ANGER OF CABUL has caused a "complaint box" to be erected at Dakka, so that every one having occasion to seek redress against Afghan officials can have redress.

GENERAL SKOBELEFF held to the opinion that the grand thing for Russia to do would be to make a campaign against India, and then allow England to continue her rule in Hindustan on condition of a close and sincere alliance between Russia and Great Britain. Very nice, no doubt, for the Czar, but what would the Empress of India say when she had to give half her throne in the East to her ambitious brother of Nihilistic celebrity—the Emperor of all the Russias. But more than this. "For England herself, in an agreement with Russia, lies the very essence of her existence as one of the great powers of the world." Ye shades of Nelson and Wellington! that nought but a race of liars and conspirators stands between old England and national extinction.

THE Muhammadan festival of the Mohurram and its Hindu rival, the Dusserah, come this year at the same date. The antagonistic devotees have not for thirty-six years had such a splendid opportunity of breaking one another's heads.

THEOSOPHY is again to the front. This time its advocates proclaim that human existence is composed of two interlacing triangles. This is so clear as to be convincing to the meanest intellect; obviously in the case of non-Theosophists they are obtuse-angled triangles.

THEY are gallant in India, and have ladies' races in the regattas, but whether the fair rowers train and run on the river bank in tights at cock-crow does not appear.

How the mouth waters to be a "burra mem sahib" (a great lady in India). Listen: "They have little kingdoms of their own, in which they are supreme. They rule over principalities; they shine in their own hemisphere with splendour of stars of the first magnitude. They have their little courts, and their courtiers, assiduous, obsequious, sometimes, to the profane observer's eye, even cringing. They acquire the moods and indulge in the foibles of royalty. Some of them acquire a fine contempt for ordinary flesh and blood, transcend the vulgar limits of human courtesy, and in matters of politeness are like the heathen in law unto themselves. Some achieve the superlative fatuity of insisting on being addressed as 'Your Excellency;' others indulge in the unroyal luxury of unpunctuality, and keep their guests waiting and their dinner spoiling till it pleases their 'burra mem sahibships' to appear; a third amuses herself with favourites who are too often sycophants; a fourth resigns herself to moods, and deals out favours as caprice or temper suggests, and lets the ignoble vulgus around her know promptly that she is out of sorts.

THE following ode to castor oil appears in the Times of India :—

An item oft in doctors' bills,
Saviour of life's many ills,
Better by far than Cockle's pills
Art thou, O castor oil!

For when my blood is boiling hot,
I creep to thee, and murmur not,
To drink thee seems my better lot,
Nauseous castor oil!

And in the early morning fair
I take the cup that holds my share,
Then quietly to my room repair,
To imbibe castor oil!

Then when the horrid gulp is done,
How quickly to my couch I run
To lie and snooze till long past one,
After my castor oil!

In a few years the famous Euphrates of historical renown bids fair to be a thing of the past. The river is gradually being filled up with sand, and will ere long, it is to be feared, entirely disappear in the desert.

SIR JAMSETJEE JEJEBHOY has withdrawn from the chairmanship of the Bombay Residency Association on the ground that it has associated itself with one political party in England. Surely this disavowal by their Indian brethren ought to deprive the delegates to this country of any moral weight? But in politics any stick will do to beat a dog with.

MR. HORMUSJEE EDULJEE KOTWAL is a Pari sportsman, well known in the Western Presidency. In his time he has killed no less than 100 tigers, so his friends have thought fit—and well he deserves the honour—to present him with a testimonial in recognition of his prowess and gallantry.

How the amount of rain in India varies! Kurrachi in eight months could boast of no more than 4.82 inches, while Calicut, in the same period, was blessed with 117.90 inches—a difference of 2,500 per cent.!

THE Savannah Mills in Pondicherry have had a most unusual "run" of domestic afflictions. First the resident proprietor lost both wife and daughter in Paris, the former having been murdered in that gay capital; then the manager had to visit Europe owing to ill-health. After this the engineer lost his wife, and not long since the resident proprietor was thrown from his carriage, and received serious injuries; now the mechanical engineer has died. All these events happened within a space of six months.

In Japan an old lady, weary with the burden of existence, determined to make away with herself; so, intent upon this purpose, she waded into one of the numerous canals which intersect the city, but when the water came up to her waist her resolution began to give way, and she felt to calling upon Buddha to save her. At this moment a sturdy arm pulled her forth from the place of danger, with the observation, "Your prayer has been answered." The policeman who saved the old woman's life evidently had a keen appreciation of the ludicrous.

THE Japanese are becoming a teetotal race, but they do not despise good liquor, their motto being, "Wine the best of medicines and worst of poisons."

THE Indian Mirror suggests that the Government of India should economise, and commence by abolishing the post of Viceroy, the office being "merely ornamental," and for the purpose of any practical advantage "absolutely useless." Yet there are people who think it of priceless importance that Lord Dufferin happens to be at the helm at the present juncture with Burma.

BOMBAY, so far as the Natives are concerned, has gone crazy in regard to a recent municipal election. Well may the Pioneer ask what would happen if a general election were to be the fate of the Western Capital?

A SCHEME of peasant farming has recently been tried in India, with the result of an utter collapse of all the parties interested. Yet the land was given free, and loans of capital were made to the settlers, but all to no purpose; the scheme failed. Abisit omen!

LECTURES INTRODUCTORY TO THE STUDY OF THE LAW OF THE CONSTITUTION.*

In the present day, when the spirit of innovation is rampant, when the motto of the hour seems to be "whatever is wrong," a work on the Constitution of this country cannot be otherwise than a welcome contribution to the literature of the period, as tending to diffuse knowledge on a subject but little known, and to avoid the perpetration of follies and wrongs which are the inevitable accompaniments of ignorant legislation and crude statesmanship. It is scarcely necessary to add that the name of its author, Mr. A. V. Dicey, Vinerian Professor of English Law, is a guarantee that the basis is sound and the superstructure unassailable, the work of a master mind and trained intellect.

To analyse this series of lectures would be toilsome, and at best would but be an attempt to express badly what Mr. Dicey has expounded with legal precision, tempered with plain common sense; but it may not be unprofitable to glance at a few leading characteristics of the British Constitution.

To the question "What forms the centre of the Constitution," the vast majority of Englishmen would unhesitatingly answer, "the Sovereign of the realm." But this is a popular fallacy; it is true that from a practical point of view the Queen possesses no insignificant array of power, nay, more, according to strict legal right "she could disband the army; she could dismiss all the officers, from the General Commanding-in-Chief downwards; she could dismiss all the sailors too; she could sell off all our ships of war and all our naval stores; she could make a peace by the sacrifice of Cornwall and begin a war for the conquest of Brittany; she could make every citizen in the United Kingdom, male or female, a peer; she could make every parish in the United Kingdom an university; she could dismiss most of the civil servants; she could pardon all offenders"—all this and much more is within her legal prerogative, but were she to put into execution a tithe of the privileges accorded to her as of right, she would be violating the unwritten law of the Constitution. "We should rightly conclude," says Mr. Dicey, "that the whole Cabinet had gone mad if to-morrow's Gazette contained an Order in Council, not authorised by Statute, creating a new Court of Appeal." Yet, on the other hand, it would be equally inaccurate to suppose that the Queen takes no part in the government of the country—far otherwise. She is the first "lady of the land" not merely in virtue of the titular token of respect accorded to the Sovereign of this realm, but as the fountain of honour and the embodiment of the national aspirations. Recent events in connection with the downfall of the Gladstone Cabinet are a fair, good, and typical illustration of the power which a Sovereign can wield and the mark she can leave on the ends of time.

Take another illustration of things not generally known. Freedom of the Press is the boast of the land, yet from a strict legal point of view there is no such thing in so far as regards the common acceptation of the term, which is generally considered to mean that every man has a right to "say and write what he pleases, especially on social, political, or religious topics, without fear of legal penalties." Whatever a man publishes is at his risk, the same responsibility attaching to his actions in this matter as in every other deed of his life; he has no more liberty to malign his neighbour in the columns of a newspaper than to murder his enemy in the public highway; indeed, the law of libel is most searching, and few professions are more risky than that of a public journalist, whose every action is daily weighed in the balance by a thousand prying foes and angered opponents.

Yet one instance again, and it must be the last. It is generally supposed that if one party, say the Salvation Army, announces a march through the streets, while another band, in the shape of the Skeleton Army, herald a counter demonstration: in such circumstances it would be legal to forbid the first party from a proceeding calculated to produce a breach of the peace; but the law recognises no distinction as to the object with which a person or a number of persons use the highways, provided, of course, such object be in itself rightful and proper, and it would refuse to consider that the Skeleton Army, in the above illustration, caused a breach of the peace any more "than a man whose pocket is picked causes the theft by wearing a watch."

The above are but a few of the many matters which may be studied with advantage in Mr. Dicey's most lucid and admirable summary, especially timely is its appearance at the present juncture, when thousands of citizens are struggling for the power of legislating about a Constitution, of which, as a rule, they are profoundly ignorant, and of debating and discussing questions in regard to which they have not even an elementary knowledge—for such, as indeed for the public at large, Mr. Dicey's manual may with safety be recommended as a plain and useful "guide, counsellor, and friend." It is, too, no small praise to say that, considering the inherent "dryness" of the subject, the pages are by no means void of interest or lacking in attractions.

OBITUARY.

MOZUFFER ED-DIN, the Ameer of Bokhara, whose death, at the age of about sixty, and whose son's succession, are announced from Tashkend, under date Nov. 15, "was the last of the Central Asian Khans who played a prominent part in the Russian conquest of Turkestan." The loss, in 1868, of Samarcand, which commands the water-supply of Bokhara, embittered his later years, and, in the hope of obtaining its restoration, the promise of which was constantly dangled before his eyes, he gave to the Russian expedition against Khiva an amount of cordial assistance, without which it must undoubtedly have failed. Still imbued with the same hope, he sent his son (and successor), Seid Abdul Ahad, to Moscow to attend the coronation of the Tsar. His hopes were never intended to be, and never were, realised. It is understood that the young Ameer is thoroughly "Russophil," and it has been suggested by at least one contemporary that the transfer of the Russian administration from Tashkend to the more central Bokhara will not long be delayed. The probable results of this much closer proximity of the Russian headquarters to the Afghan frontier may be discounted by the least thoughtful reader.

THE origin of the "Indrajata" festival of Nepal is extremely quaint. Some 150 years ago a young lady of tender years was suddenly seized with violent fits. When she regained consciousness she bethought herself that she could turn the attack to good account, so she assured her friends that she was the incarnation of the great Goddess of Mischief. The Raja, however, turned a deaf ear to her pretensions, and ultimately banished her and all her family from the city. However, in a few hours the Royal Queen was attacked in precisely the same way; whereupon the King became as frightened as he had previously been irate, and, acknowledging the little maid as divine, established a festival in her honour.

A NATIVE phrenologist, taking as the basis of his research a photograph sent out from England, has been looking into "the big, majestic head" of Lord Randolph Churchill, and finds "that if one in a position in which the noble lord is portrayed follows the faculty of executiveness eagerly, tempered with cautiousness and moral sentiment, he will make a perfect man."

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON AND MR. DIGBY.

THE ELECTION FOR THE EALING DIVISION OF MIDDLESEX.

POLITICAL personalities are the order of the day, and considering that the highest Statesmen in the land indulge in the tempting but dangerous pastime of "baiting the adversary," perhaps but little fault can be found with lesser luminaries when they feebly endeavour to follow the lead of their betters. But we would remind Mr. Digby that, true as is the aphorism "nothing succeeds like success" as regards most matters, it is absolutely essential that such should be the case on the occasion of a personal attack; to fail is ludicrous, to miss the mark involves laughter, contempt and scorn—venom if not deadly is harmless. Take the case in point. The gentleman to whom allusion has just been made has thought fit to indulge in a most violent attack upon so deservedly respected a Statesman as Lord George Hamilton, reflecting upon his conduct when Under Secretary of State for India. The object is clear—it is a mere electioneering device. Cast mud at a candidate it may chance that it lose him the contest, especially when, as in this instance, there is not very much time left to disprove the statements which are the gravamen of the charge, of course magna est veritas et prevalebit; but the victory may not be achieved till after the electors have given their vote, and then—well, n'importe, the contest is over, the poisoned arrow has done its work, and the past cannot be recalled. But on this occasion our friend had reckoned without his host. It chanced—and fortunate, indeed, that it was so—that one of the constituency was a gentleman well known in connection with Eastern affairs, and no less respected. We allude to Sir George Birdwood, who, moved by his inability to reconcile Mr. Digby's statements with facts, took upon himself the patriotic and high-minded duty of picking up the gauntlet. The result is a letter to the electors of Ealing, which we reprint in extenso in another column. The rout was conclusive; a more utterly crushing retort it would be impossible to conceive, and we would advise Mr. Digby the next time he refers to the Acts of the Apostles, to "read mark, learn, and inwardly digest" the familiar tale of the "little accident" which happened to Ananias and Sapphira. Unfortunately, however, it is not every day in the week that a Digby is silenced by a Birdwood. Of course the champions were not equally matched. The worthy knight has achieved a reputation second to none of his contemporaries, as regards knowledge of, and sympathy with, the people of the East; he is a link, as it were—perhaps since the death of Sir John Kaye, the principal link—between European and Native schools of thought, and it would be difficult to decide whether East or West most appreciate his efforts to unite the two nations in the bonds of fellowship and fraternity. But, on the other hand, his opponent cannot plead ignorance. He was for years the editor of a leading journal in Hindustan; he either knows, or should be supposed to know, the subjects of which he treated, and it is inconceivable that he can have been misinformed in regard to facts which should be within his own personal experience. But be this as it may, and we are not careful to remove him from the horns of the very serious dilemma, of ignorance, on the one hand, or wilfulness on the other, he has been hoist with his own petard; and every patriotic Englishman who cares more for truth than for party owes a debt of gratitude for the timely and complete exposure of an adversary who was able enough to be dangerous, and withal shallow enough to be caught tripping.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE EALING DIVISION OF MIDDLESEX.

FELLOW ELECTORS,

I very respectfully solicit your indulgence in addressing you in reply to the extraordinary indictment against Lord George Hamilton, as Under Secretary of State for India during the years 1874-8, which is being circulated among us by Mr. William Digby, C.I.E., formerly of the Madras Presidency, for the express purpose of damaging his Lordship's candidature for the Parliamentary representation of the Ealing Division of Middlesex.

I should never have dreamed, under ordinary circumstances, of taking an openly contentious part in an English election; and I do so in the present instance only because Mr. Digby is disseminating detailed and misleading statements regarding our administration of India, which it is impossible for me to allow to pass in what might appear to my neighbours and fellow-electors to be the silence of acquiescence. For this reason, and because Mr. Digby holds a position in this country of considerable responsibility, and as an Anglo-Indian ex-editor might be presumed to know what he is writing about, I feel it incumbent upon me to publicly expose the errors in to which he has fallen in his letter of the 28th ult. I am not concerned in repelling his personal attack on Lord George Hamilton, which is no business of mine, nor in defending the British administration of India, which is assailed behind his Lordship's back, and I write solely for the information of my fellow-electors of Ealing, Acton, and Chiswick, who have not had the special opportunities which I have enjoyed through a long life of studying Indian subjects.

I shall proceed to do so in the briefest and plainest manner, confining myself to the issues raised by Mr. Digby, and determined that, on whatever side the votes of my fellow-electors may be given, so far at least as India is involved in the present correspondence, they shall be recorded in the light of the actual facts.

1.—Mr. Digby's first assertion is, that under the License-tax of 1878, widows earning three-halfpence a day and sixpence a week were taxed two shillings. In the one case such a tax would be 5 per cent. on an income of forty shillings a year, in the other case 8 per cent. on an income of twenty-six shillings.

The fact is that the lowest income taxable was 200 shillings, and only 2 per cent. was in any case payable.

2.—His second assertion is, that Lord George Hamilton drew £2,000 a year, and paid nothing towards Indian taxation.

The fact is, Lord George Hamilton drew £1,500 a year, on which he paid English Income-tax like the rest of us. Surely Mr. Digby does not wish to tax Indian officials twice over, once in India and once in England. It would be an exact parallel to this childish charge against Lord George Hamilton, if I were to abuse Lord Dufferin, because, while absent in India as Viceroy, he does not pay the license duties charged in Middlesex upon pawnbrokers and publicans. Besides paying the English Income-tax on his salary, Lord George Hamilton contributed a tenth of it, as did Lord Salisbury of his, as a contribution to the Indian Famine Fund, 1878.

3.—Mr. Digby's third assertion is, that the English officials while receiving in pay, pensions, &c., £12,000,000 a year, carefully exempted themselves from liability to pay the License-tax, and that Lord George Hamilton sanctioned this exemption.

The fact is, that on pay, pension, &c., drawn in England, Indian officials pay the English Income-tax; that the pay of the European civil administration in India is nearer £4,000,000 than £12,000,000; and that no special exemptions were sanctioned in favour of European officials in India. The reason why their salaries as well as those of the Indian officials are exempted from License-tax is, that shortly before the Madras famine of 1873, Lord Northbrook, one of the most judicious of Indian Viceroy, abolished the Income-tax, to which the salaries of British officials in India were subject; and if I remember rightly, Mr. Digby, then, as editor of a Madras newspaper, strongly advocated the step. Consequently when direct taxation again became necessary, chiefly to provide funds for the precautions taken against the recurrence of famines, it was found impossible to reimpose the Income-tax; and the Indian Government was compelled to fall back upon a License-tax on trades, which of course could not be levied on official salaries. Neither does it touch the lowest classes in India, who have never had to pay a single farthing of direct taxation under our administration. And if the License-tax is so iniquitous as Mr. Digby would imply, why is it the fact, as it is, that not the smallest change was made in it, while Lord Hartington, and Lord Kimberley, and Lord Ripon were in power, and that it remains to this day exactly as it was left by Lord Lytton?

4.—Mr. Digby's fourth assertion is, that in 1878 Sir John Strachey raised the tax on salt 40 per cent.; and that Lord George Hamilton did not stop this.

The fact is, that successive Governors-General—Tweedledum Tories and Tweedledee Whigs—had been for eight years gradually taking measures to equalise the duty on salt throughout India, so as to enable them to remove the Customs preventive line, called "the Salt Hedge" because marked by a prickly pear hedge, nearly 2,300 miles long. This was finally attained in 1878, when the duty was increased on salt consumed by 47,000,000, and reduced on that consumed by 130,000,000 of people. The total reduction on the average throughout India effected at the time was about 12 per cent.; and later a further reduction of 20 per cent. was carried out by Lord Ripon, or 32 per cent. in all. This equalisation of the Salt-tax also enabled the Government of India to get rid of several vexatious petty imposts, such as the internal sugar duties. The abolition of the huge Salt Hedge, which Mr. Grant Duff compared to the Great Wall of China, stretching as it did in an irregular line right across India, over a distance, as the crow flies, as great as that from London to Constantinople, was one of the greatest blessings ever conferred by our administration upon the people of India. It was guarded by an army of 8,000 men, and was maintained with the object of bringing under control all the sources from which the people could alone derive their salt. It was in the time of Lord Salisbury, and Lord George Hamilton, and Mr. Stanhope, and under the Viceroyalty of Lord Lytton, that this abominable system was utterly swept away by Sir John Strachey, and the necessary measures were taken for supplying the people of India with an unlimited and progressively cheapened supply of salt. Every Liberal leader has given the beneficent policy then inaugurated his heartiest approval; and Lord Ripon and Sir Evelyn Baring have received well-merited honour for the manner in which they adopted and further developed it. The small foundation of fact on which Mr. Digby has built up his monstrous assertion is that, as already stated, in order to render it possible to carry out these truly philanthropic measures, it became necessary to make a temporary increase to the duties in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies. But that increase at its highest point did not add more than twopenny in the whole year to the expenditure of the average consumer; and the final result of the measures organised by Sir John Strachey, the most successful of Indian Finance Ministers, has been that the people of India now obtain their salt at a cheaper rate than at any time of which there is any record.

5.—Mr. Digby's fifth assertion is, that between 1874 and 1881 the debt of India was increased by £49,000,000; and that there was, in addition, a net deficit of £6,940,000.

The fact is that the net deficit was not in addition to the debt; and it amounted to only £6,930,000, although the expenditure caused by war and famine in those years was £23,830,000.

The debt incurred in redeeming the East India Company's dividend, in purchasing the East Indian Railway, and in constructing other public works, calculated to reduce the charges on Indian taxpayers, and to be of inestimable benefit to the country generally, was £40,730,000.

Between the years 1874 and 1881, the charge for railways, irrigation works, and interest (including exchange), was reduced by £2,630,000 a year.

The assertion that when Lord Ripon and Sir Evelyn Baring had in the first year of their assumption of office in India to incur debt to pay off liabilities left by their predecessors, is an absolutely unaccountable misrepresentation. The truth is, as the able financial statements of Sir Evelyn Baring himself distinctly show that Sir John Strachey and Lord Lytton left a bonâ fide annual surplus of more than £4,000,000 of revenue, over the ordinary normal expenditure.

The only addition to the debt made by Lord Ripon in his first year of office was for investment in railways and works of irrigation; and otherwise he did not incur debt to the extent of a single penny on account of his predecessors; on the contrary, he came into the possession of a magnificent surplus.

6.—Mr. Digby's sixth assertion is that, apart from the war, military expenditure was increased by nearly £2,000,000 a year; and that, in seven years, £25,000,000 was added to the military expenditure.

The fact is that, apart from the war, the increase was £1,490,000; of which £880,000 in the non-effective charges, was due to the pensions payable to soldiers who enlisted for Indian service during the mutiny, and to Indian officers whose retirement caused a saving of expense in India.

The effective charges were increased by £610,000, owing to additional allowances for the Native troops, non-commissioned officers, and medical officers, and to improved ordnance and small arms. Excluding war charges, the payments in seven years were above the average of 1873-4 by £7,540,000, owing to the above causes, and the heavy cost of provisions in years of scarcity and famine.

7.—Mr. Digby's seventh, final, and absurdest assertion of all is, that Lord George Hamilton could have foreseen the mortality of the famine years, and have checked it by at least one-half, but that he did nothing to prevent it.

The fact is that Lord George Hamilton could not possibly command the windows of Heaven to open, and the rains to fall. A native Prince, I recently read in a German work on ethnography, tried something of the sort, by literally bombarding the temple of the tutelary deity of his capital with shot and shell, that haply it might give ear to his prayers, but he signally failed in the attempt. The published correspondence shows that from July, 1876, before the failure of the rains in that year became a certainty, the Viceroy of India and the Secretary of State were in constant correspondence as to the course of action that it was best to adopt; and in January, 1877, a despatch was sent, giving the most hearty support to any measures that could be devised for mitigating the effects of the famine, and relieving the suffering districts.

It is, indeed, hard to conceive a more reckless perversion of fact than that by which Mr. Digby lays upon Lord George Hamilton, Sir Richard Temple, and others, the responsibility for the mortality and suffering which were caused by the famines of 1876-79; the most calamitous visitation of Providence which has fallen upon India in the present century; and like all the prior famines chiefly due, as students of physical geography are aware, to that country being situated within the solstitial zone of the Northern hemisphere. It would be an insult to my fellow-electors to reply in further detail to Mr. Digby's misrepresentations under this head, which can only rouse the reprobation and contempt of everyone acquainted with the true facts of the case.

To give adequate relief when famine overtakes a population of 250,000,000, scattered through a country as large as Europe, excepting Russia, is, unhappily, a task beyond the powers of man, as Mr. Digby has himself admitted in his Memorandum of 22nd Jan., 1879, on the "Madras Famine," printed in Vol. II. of the Parliamentary "Report of Famine Commission."

Everyone who knows anything of the truth is aware of the untiring devotion with which public servants of every grade in India met the demands made on their energy and self-denial by the famines of 1876-79, and the millions of public money that were spent in the relief of distress; and the noble private charity which it called forth. These are not matters in regard to which honourable Englishmen, whether they call themselves Liberals or Conservatives, will for a moment believe that their political opponents are less humane and compassionate than themselves.

Such, then, are the groundless assertions on which Mr. Digby has based four broadsides of political denunciation of Lord George Hamilton, but which in the light of facts can only draw down upon himself indignation and even ridicule. Here are some lines from the conclusion of his letter:—

"Remember the millions starved to death while Lord George Hamilton was Under Secretary of State for India; Remember that if he had been sufficiently alive to his duty he might have saved some of these millions; Remember that in little things as well as in great, preserving his own large salary from taxation while pursuing the poor widow and the struggling artisan to prosecution and (in some cases) even to prison, he cared naught for the people; and bearing all these things in mind, whether you be a Liberal or a Tory, determine that the man who, in any degree, is responsible for the condition of things I have set forth, shall not receive your vote at the General Election, but that, on the contrary, you will use all your efforts to prevent Lord George Hamilton again entering Parliament, either as Representative for the Ealing Division as for any other constituency."

Mr. Digby is evidently unaware of the importance in his own interest of being accurate in the statement of facts when they affect the character of a political opponent.

In my eyes Mr. Digby is still further guilty of one of the greatest offences against the welfare of India, in dragging the affairs of that country into the "rough and tumble" arena of an English contested election.

In conclusion, I would express the hope that I may have set forth my reply to him in words of truth and soberness, without prejudice to either candidate for the suffrages of the Ealing Division of Middlesex, and simply in the discharge of a casual, but imperative duty.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

Your most obedient, faithful Servant.

GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 6th inst.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad 4th inst.

THE latest news comes, as usual, from the Times correspondent in Calcutta, and is as follows:—

"Some disappointment is felt here owing to the entire absence of news from the Burmese expedition since the accounts were received of the capture of the Minhla fort. This silence, however, need not cause anxiety, as it is doubtless due to defective telegraphic communication. The line from Thayetmyo to Mandalay, never very efficient, seems to have been out of order for some time past; and it has perhaps been cut or destroyed by the enemy. Two working parties of the Indian Telegraph Department are now engaged in laying a new line from the frontier to Minhla. When this line is completed—as it will shortly be—we shall doubtless have more regular and fuller news from the force. It is hoped that General Prendergast is now in Mandalay.

THE Rangoon correspondent of the Times telegraphed yesterday:—

Very few details from the Irrawaddy force have reached us here. Fuller information would prevent unfounded rumours among the Natives.

There is no news from Tonghoo. The fort there is being strengthened, simply for the purpose of overawing the people.

The Woon of Myingyan is said to be favourable to the British, and to have ordered the people not to resist the passage of the force.

No disturbance has occurred in British Burma; but business is at a standstill in Rangoon.

Thebaw has issued a second proclamation, similar to the first, calling upon his army to advance into India.

We have received the following from the India Office:—

"From Chief Commissioner, British Burmah, Nov. 21.

"No further news from General Prendergast.

"Press correspondents telegraphed from Magwe, 20th, taken chiefly by Clutterbuck with Naval Brigade, after slight resistance. Three Italians captured.

"Army proceeding up river. Head-quarters reached Membo. Next engagement expected at Sigaing."

THE United Service Gazette gives the following copy of a telegram received at the Admiralty from Captain Woodward, Her Majesty's ship Turquoise:—

"Rangoon, November 15, 7.20 a.m.—No. 3 King's war vessel captured at Simboungeh by armed launches, Kathleen and Irrawaddy under Clutterbuck, after sharp encounter with fort. Robert Hutchinson, Turquoise, wounded.

FROM the Afghan frontier we learn that, as we long since said, little more work can be done by the Boundary Commission ere winter sets in. To Maruchak is but a small portion of the distance to be traversed. From other sources we are given to understand that the members of the Mission are on thoroughly friendly terms with their Russian colleagues;—

Parties of the British and Russian superior officers left to-day to jointly demarcate the boundary by sections, so as to insure speed. The Zulfikar-Maruchak section will probably be ready by the 26th inst., when the Commissioners will start.

The frontier should be settled as far as Maruchak by December 15, when heavy weather is certain to set in. But, starting about the middle of February, the frontier should be demarcated as far as the Oxus by the end of May.

Captains Maitland and Taloot were at the Bamian, en route to Balkh, on October 31. They had been snowed up, and their work was injured by the weather.

The Persian route is now the best for any letters intended for members of the mission.

MEANWHILE, the Russians are not asleep in Central Asia. Are we as energetic with our Frontier Railway?—

The railway between Kizil Arvat and Askabad will be opened at the end of the present month.

General Annenkoff has gone to Bokhara and Tashkend in order to arrange for carrying the railway line through Bokhara and Samarcand to Tashkend.

WE take the following from the Admiralty and Horse Guards Gazette:—

The Russian Admiralty has despatched within the last few days a number of officers from Cronstadt to Central Asia to take part in the operation of transferring the Aral fleet from Kazala to the river Oxus. The Russians, as is known, intend extending the Transcaspian railway from Askabad to the river Oxus, and it has been arranged that the steamers of the Aral fleet shall maintain regular traffic on that river between Khiva and Afghan Turkestan. In his "Russian Advance Towards Asia," Mr. Charles Marvin gives a long account of the rise and actual condition in 1882 of the Aral fleet, from which we gather that it consisted then of six steamers, nine transport barges, seven large iron ferry boats, ten iron long boats for the various river forts, and twelve iron and four wooden shallops belonging to the steamers and barges. Of these, it is only intended, we understand, to transfer five steamers and six barges to the river Oxus. The vessels chosen will be the strongest of the fleet, and being all armed, barges as well as steamers, with 4-pdr. and 9-pdr. guns, will be fit for any service that may be required of them on the Oxus.

THE Civil and Military Gazette learns that:—

According to the best information available, there are at the present moment seventy-eight adult Europeans in Mandalay with their families. Amongst this number are English, Americans, French, Germans, and Italians. Besides these, there are about fifty Hindustani traders, British subjects, with a few Persians, and, of course, a sprinkling of the ubiquitous community of Jews.

THE distinguished Native Statesman who writes to the Madras Times under the nom de plume of "Native Thinker" has given his countrymen, in his own pleasant style, much excellent advice. Sometimes he unbends, and tells us an amusing story. Here is one:—

Even the poor coolie is sometimes quick and brilliant in repartee, as the following story shows:—"An employer of labour got angry with a coolie and called him 'Kalooday Magan,' which means son of an ass! The offended coolie, in a respectful attitude and tone, quickly replied, 'Sir, I have always regarded you as my father!' The master instantly disappeared after this shock.

THE Madras Mail remarks, not for the first time, on the circumstance that the Indian Post-office does not, as is the case here, keep a debtor and creditor account with the various Government departments for the circulation of official correspondence. Were this done, the Post-office would, as the Ceylon Observer justly says, show a surplus which would justify the granting to the public of further concessions, all in the end bringing fresh grist to the postal mill. The present Postmaster-General for India may, before departing, leave behind him a lasting footprint on the sands of time by taking this hint into consideration and acting on it.

THE last two issues of the same paper comment at length on the case of Dr. G. T. Thomas, which has excited a good deal of attention in Sleepy Hollow, but which, in itself, of no great moment except to the gentleman concerned, has acquired importance on account of the severe snub administered by the Viceroy to the Governor of Madras, at that time his guest at Simla. It seems that a Captain Hamilton, a relative of the superintending surgeon at the Madras Hospital, where Dr. Thomas was, so to speak, house doctor, had arrived in a state of collapsed cholera; the gravamen of the charge against Dr. Thomas being, that he had been warned of the pending arrival of the patient, had taken no steps in the matter, and had, when informed of Captain Hamilton's arrival, rushed to the bedside from the table of the matron, Mrs. Anderson, without changing the evening dress in which he would naturally appear at a dinner party. For this he was reported to the Government as having, although previously warned—which, as it turned out, was not the case—flagrantly neglected his duty; and he was, accordingly, placed on the unemployed list. (The real offence was, doubtless, his having dined with the matron, Mrs. Anderson, one of Mr. Grant Duff's pet aversions.) The doctor was wise enough to appeal to the Viceroy, who, unbiassed by his personal acquaintance with Mr. Duff, has recorded his opinion that the case was too trivial to deserve serious notice. Were not Mr. Duff sometimes inclined to be prejudiced, and even spiteful, and were not doctrinaires impracticable, and—if such a word may be coined—unameliorable, one might hope that such a portentous slap in the face might not be wholly unprofitable to the public by influencing the future proceedings of Mr. Grant Duff.

THE Lords of the Admiralty, who usually reject useful inventions, and purchase (by contract) things at three times their value, subsequently selling them for about a quarter of what they are worth, have, for once, made a really useful acquisition—they have bought a score or so of Colonel Laurie's "Our Burmese Wars and Relations with Burma" (a work to which we referred in our last issue) for distribution among Her Majesty's ships on the East India station. The country might well be pleased if they always spent money as profitably.

It was to be expected that the Native press should object to the expense of the Burmese expedition. The Mahratta says:—

If we calmly consider this question, we must be struck with the jingoism that seems to be rampant in Anglo-Indian and English politicians. Granted that there is mis-government in Burmah, we fail to see how that affects us. Burmah singly can never take the aggressive against us. We have only, therefore, to see that he gets no one to back him up. This we can very easily do by keeping a strict eye on that court and on the foreign Powers which have relations with it. We cannot see why we should go to war with such a puny little State on such insufficient ground. Waste of money and life we cannot afford to indulge in. If the mission of England be really peace, let her act up to it. These are not the ways of peace surely. We hope that the peaceful party in Burmah will prevail with the Prince and induce him to accede to the proposal put forward by the Government of India.

The Indian Mirror says:—It seems to us that the war now sought to be forced on Upper Burmah will be a perfectly unjust, inequitable, and even aggressive war, and will not certainly be very honourable either to the policy or the military prowess of England. We yet hope that, in the interests both of England and India, hostilities may be averted.

THE Amrita Bazaar Patrika falls foul, amusingly enough, of Western civilisation, and of its effects all and sundry. It tells us that:—

The result of the progress of Western civilization in the country has been to create two parties in the country, one for brutal indulgence in sensual pleasures, and the other for penitence, privation, and dull dead formality. Eat, drink, and be merry, and confound your souls, is the motto of one party. Preach, keep long hairs and put on a vinegar aspect of rigidity are the three ways of the other party. When a contemporary preaches to people to refrain even from the innocent pleasures of the blessed three days of the Doorga Poojah we cannot agree with him. A modicum of pleasure is as much a necessity for the existence of an individual or a nation, as bread or rice for the satisfaction of hunger and water for the alleviation of thirst. Famine, flood, and epidemic is the normal condition of the country under the British rule. War or the prospect of a war is going to be added as another usual or normal incident to the destinies of this poor and unfortunate nation.

THE amalgamation of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi, the Punjab Northern, the Indus Valley, and the Sind-Peshin Railways into one united frontier system will take place from January 1. This move is undoubtedly in the right direction.

BUT a difficulty has, to quote the Pioneer, "cropped up" in connection with the Camp of Exercise, the manœuvres connected with which are, under sanction from the India Office, to be executed by 40,000 men. "The troops from the Punjab are under orders to march to the neighbourhood of the manœuvres; but, as the bridges of boats over the Sutlej and Beas were abolished some time ago, and cannot, on the score of expense, be replaced, the troops will have to be ferried across."

Now, if these manœuvres are aught but a farce, they are the foreshadowing of operations in the field. Is it to be understood that, in case of war, the above-named two rivers are, like the bridges in autumn manœuvres, to be "considered as blocked?" If the Punjab troops must be ferried over them to reach Delhi, it would seem that troops from Delhi would have to be ferried over to reach the Punjab. Is this intended?

WHEN will any satisfactory steps be taken to recognise in practice the vast importance of ensuring efficient communication for an army between the opposite banks of rivers? How many battles have been lost for want of it?

AND, by the way, let us once again ask what progress is being made with the Sukkur-Kohri Bridge, perhaps as important a means of communication for frontier defence as any.

We are pleased to see, from a return furnished to us by the South Kensington Museum authorities, that the visitors to the Indian section have, during the past season, reckoning from July 4, reached the considerable number of nearly three-quarters of a million, the exact tale being 730,508.

Chit Chat.

DARJEELING bids fair to take a conspicuous place in the forthcoming Indo-Colonial Exhibition. Not only are there numerous products likely to attract attention, but the main avenue of the Court on both sides is to be decorated with handsome carved work screens at a cost of £600.

DRUNKENNESS is, to a certain extent, a question of degree, but it is beyond the pale of argument that a man is hopelessly intoxicated when he sits with one leg doubled under him, and then looks all around him to find the missing leg!

A LITTLE child was once sadly puzzled on hearing that God made his father, his mother, himself, his baby sisters and brothers, his fat nurse—in a word, all the child's youthful circle of acquaintances. "But where did he get all the skins from?" was the perplexing inquiry of the perplexed infant.

AN enthusiastic bicyclist is now "on tour" in the wilds of Asia; he has already traversed a considerable portion of Asia Minor, and contemplates visiting India. But how does he manage the hills?

WHAT is the use of posting up a notice that a certain spot on the beach is dangerous owing to the sudden roll of the sea which sweeps over it, when not one person in a hundred who passes the locality can read or write? Yet this is just what has happened at Madras.

LITTLE things sometimes betoken great minds. So we read that when the Viceroy pays a visit to Lucknow, he will be escorted over the Presidency by General Wilson, who, a quarter of a century since, bore a prominent part in the heroic defence of the place. Thoughtful and considerate actions like these are links in the chain of life which stand the wear and tear of time.

IT is stated in the Pioneer that whereas Government when paying money to an officer reckon the rupee at the current rate of exchange—that is at, say, just now 1s. 6½d., whereas when they receive contributions to the military funds from the same individual they give an arbitrary rate of 2s. 3d. for the rupee, so that what is "sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander," and the unhappy servant of the Crown loses 5½d. + 3d. = 8½d. on every two shillings concerned. This seems incredible, if true. We can only bless our stars that we do not serve in India.

IT is well-known that Natives of India hoard and bury money and jewels—a tradition of the times when the plundering hordes of the East rendered property and valuables too insecure to be kept in open view—but it may be questioned whether any potentate in the world's history ever laid in mother earth property of such a fabulous amount as three millions sterling. Yet this is the figure at which the hidden treasures of the house of Burdwan, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, are estimated, and the Board of Revenue are not quite clear who is "the owner of this pretty thing."

SOME of our English reformers should visit Kashmir. There, it is said, no change can be wrong, as everything is as bad as it can be. If, too, they were there, they would not be here. This would be a decided gain to "here," while "there" might perhaps appreciate the zeal of their visitants.

A SOMEWHAT curious case happened at Madras. A prisoner pleaded that at the time he committed a certain offence he was of unsound mind, but as he conducted his own case it devolved upon the Chief Justice to "put him in the way" of proving that he was a lunatic. Unfortunately there was a difficulty in the way. If a man can protect his own interests in a court of justice without the aid of counsel he is not, as a rule, a lunatic; while, if he used formerly to belong to that persuasion, it is not easy to prove when the change occurred from irresponsibility to responsibility. It is not surprising that the jury found the prisoner to be of sound mind.

THE recent cyclone at Fabre Point, Orissa, is supposed to have been one of the most calamitous on record. The wave, which was from fifteen to twenty feet in height, stretched over an area fifty miles in length, by four in breadth, destroying in its source upwards of five thousand poor wretched villagers, to say nothing of homes, trees, cattle. The spot where this happened has the familiar name of "Jumbo."

KIDDERPORE is in a dilemma. The new docks are so costly that it will be necessary to make a charge of sixteen annas a ton to ships which use it, whereas goods can now be put on board export vessels for about ten annas a ton.

THE Calcutta Chamber of Commerce are diligently considering what sort of a reply shall be given to the application of the Royal Commission on Trade for an expression of their views on the subject of the depression of trade, but at present they have got no nearer the mark than that "Trade is a thing which rights itself sooner or later." Of course, if a man is drowning, physical difficulties right themselves sooner or later, but, meanwhile, the man may chance to die. Does not the analogy hold good as regards commerce?

"SHURE," said an Irishman to a stranger, who did not see much to admire in a Custom House on Erin's shores, "that's only the back of it, the front's behind!"

INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.

TO THE EDITOR.

MY LORD,—I am indebted to Mr. Digby, for an early copy of his letter of the 11th inst., in reply to my answer of the 2nd inst. to his original letter to the electors of the Ealing division of Middlesex, of the 28th ult.

I hope that Mr. Digby, whose excellent services in the Madras Famine were rewarded by Lord Lytton and the Government of which your lordship was a member, with the Companionship of the Indian Empire, will not deem me wanting in courtesy when I say frankly that his present letter requires, for those who are familiar with the matters in dispute between us, no answer.

1. Under the head of "Famines" he merely repeats the perfectly monstrous charge that your lordship was responsible for half of the terrible mortality of 1876-78. He goes on to say that mortality from famine in India has largely increased under British rule; but he only gives lists of the famines that have occurred since we took over the administration of the country. He says nothing of the famines that have periodically devastated India from B.C. 503, the date of the earliest Indian famine of which there is any account. It is only under our rule that the mortality from famine has been accurately recorded, but we may judge what it must have been under native rule, from the fact that the great famine of A.D. 1200 ravaged the Deccan for twelve years, and that the famine of A.D. 1396, which also lasted twelve years, was of so awful a character that it was popularly supposed to be a manifestation of the goddess Doorga Deevie herself, and under her name is still traditionally remembered throughout Hindustan. Mr. Digby scouts the idea of the position of India within the "solstitial zone" having anything to do with the subject. But the fact is that in all the countries of the solstitial zone of the Northern hemisphere life is balanced on an extremely fine edge, and in such of them as are not blessed with a civilised Government it is slowly wasting away under the increasing secular stress of solar desiccation. In a preface which I wrote to the Catalogue of the Indian Section of the Edinburgh Forestry Exhibition of 1884, I pointed out that the British conquest of India was, in the providence of God, just in time to save that country from the fate of Afghanistan and Persia; and that if Russia would reap the full benefits of her conquests in Central Asia, and restore to those regions the prosperity which they enjoyed in antiquity, she had only to introduce into them our Indian system of Forest Conservancy.

2. Under "Increase of Debt," Mr. Digby's assertion was that between 1874 and 1881 the debt of India was increased by £49,760,000, in addition to which there was a deficit of £6,940,000. The answer given was that the increase of debt was not in addition to, but included, the amount needed to meet the deficit, and that, although upwards of £49,000,000 had been added to the debt, in order to construct public works, &c., the burden on the people for interest and maintenance of public works had been reduced by £2,630,000 a year. Yet Mr. Digby repeats that the burden of taxation on the people is not lessened.

3. Under "Salt," he pursues the same course of positive iteration. His assertion was that Sir John Strachey raised the salt tax 40 per cent, the charge against your lordship being that you did not stop it. My reply was that in 1878, in order to equalise the salt duties throughout India, the duty was raised on salt consumed by 47,000,000 in Bombay and Madras, and reduced on that consumed in Hindustan by 130,000,000, involving a total reduction at the time of 12 per cent, and subsequently of 32 per cent. In reply to this, Mr. Digby quotes the selling price of salt in Madras in different years from 1805 to 1882. We have nothing to do in the present correspondence with anything before the years during which your lordship was Under Secretary of State for India; but I may as well state, for the information of those who may not know it, that down to 1838 salt was untaxed in India; that a tax was imposed in that year to get rid of a number of vexatious imposts, such as octroi and transit duties, which largely raised the price of salt to actual consumers; and that the tax was raised in 1844 in order especially to get rid of the oppressive Mokhtarfa tax.

4. Under the head or the "License Tax" Mr. Digby confessedly collapses. He says he meant the "Municipal License Tax" (Sic). Now, what on earth could your lordship have to do with the Municipal Tax to which Mr. Digby refers? Mr. Digby speaks of "this slight error," this "accidental error," of "misdescription" on his part, being "overborne by two misstatements of facts" of mine, which are that (1) I (really it was the printer) wrote of the Madras famine of 1873 (an obvious printer's error, as the context proves); and (2) state (which is all my own writing) that Mr. Digby was in India in 1876-8. I always understood that he edited the Madras Times during 1876-78, and wrote in it during the latter part of Lord Northbrook's administration, 1872-76. I am quite willing to acknowledge my error on the point. But I ask, in all courtesy toward Mr. Digby, whether it is possible to seriously deal with an opponent who, under the perturbations of political passion, conducts an argument in such "happy-go-lucky" style?—I beg to remain, my lord, yours very respectfully, GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE PRESENT DEPRESSION IN TRADE.*

These two papers, which divided the prize offered by Messrs. Pears for the best Essay on the causes of, and the remedies for, the present depression of trade, though containing nothing very original, deserve perusal. Perhaps the most valuable part of the pamphlet is Professor Leone Levi's introduction. As might have been expected from the Professor's well-known opinions, he will tolerate no qualified allegiance to free-trade doctrines, be they even carried out to the utmost. Theoretically, his logic is unanswerable. But there is such a thing—though our Professor probably never has had, and, we hope, never will have, practical acquaintance with it—as an empty stomach, and he passes very dryshod over the question, what would be our position were an enemy's fleet to intercept our corn supplies. Yet surely this is, for a nation inhabiting an island which in great measure—owing to legislation to which we need not further refer—is unable to produce food enough for its own population, the one vital question: beside which all theories of free trade, fair trade, or any other trade, sink into utter insignificance, are merely academic, and can never be debated to any real purpose. What would be the state of London were the quatern loaf, owing to failure of corn supplies, “up” to two shillings—no impossible contingency in certain circumstances (“Even money,” as the takers call it, with a vengeance)—and all the hungry denizens of the East-end, not to speak of thousands of professional thieves, let loose on the town? We are aware that these considerations do not fit in with the theories of political economists; but do they not merit a moment's reflection? Nor does it much avail us to hide, like ostriches, our heads in the sand, saying, this can never come to pass, when the highest naval authorities tell us the exact contrary.

Further, we are somewhat disappointed that neither of the Essays explains at all, to our satisfaction, why so many British contractors have (however “unpatriotically”) transferred a large portion of their establishments, and placed a still larger portion of their orders, abroad. The shortsighted policy of trades' unions may have something to do with this, but can hardly account for it altogether. We hope that the Royal Commission may have some success in elucidating this point, so vitally important to the welfare of the labouring classes.

CASSELL'S HISTORY OF INDIA.†

The history of India has yet to be written—a history, that is, which shall be at once faithful, lucid, and interesting. Events in the East follow with such rapidity, that the records of the Empire become intricate and involved to a degree that few persons care to follow them, and the reader abandons in weariness and disgust all attempts to realise the ever-shifting items of battle, slaughter and victory. It is, perhaps, no slur upon the anonymous author of Cassell's “History of India” to assert that his work will not fill the void, so far as regards a brilliant, enticing account of the British proceedings in the East; indeed, apparently, it does not aim higher than being a plain, straightforward digest of what occurred from the establishment of the East India Company, at the opening of the seventeenth century, till the period when, on the field of the cloth of gold, at Delhi, the Queen was proclaimed Empress of India. The style is plain, concise, and unpretentious, and those who want to learn how the mighty fabric of our dominion in Hindustan was built up, will find ready to hand all that they are likely to require, while the price is so insignificant that none need hesitate to purchase the book.

OVERLAND TELEGRAPH FROM INDIA TO EUROPE.‡

This paper, which contains many facts of importance, might well have been republished before many of the measures which it advocates were, under a Government in some degree alive to the interests of the nation, in a fair way of being carried into effect. We have every reason to believe that no very long period will elapse ere our telegraph extends to Kabul and Kandahar. Eventually it might be further extended to Herat and, if possible, to Maimeneh, and even to Balkh, a native agent, faute de mieux, being placed at each city. But we do not, as yet, see our way to connecting our telegraph with Russian lines. “Nothing like leather”; and, to Mr. Pitman and his confrères, nothing like telegraphs. It is not well to forget that most cyphers, telegraphic or other, are, by careful study, decypherable, and that, in particular, our own telegraphic code—perhaps the most clumsy ever invented, and one which Macaulay's schoolboy might be trusted to discover—has been, at Havana, stolen, under pretence of making a legitimate seizure, by the most dishonest Government in Europe, and doubtless reproduced for the information of Governments concerned. We may be sure that the Russians were not the last to obtain a copy. Putting, however, aside the insolent chicanery habitual to the Spanish Government, and with which the Foreign Office, no longer under the sway of a weakling, may be trusted to deal, we should most strongly object to placing our telegraphs in the way of being regularly “tapped” whenever an important State message was on its way. That this would be the case if India's telegraphic communication with Europe passed through Russia, no rational being can doubt.

DICKENS'S DICTIONARY OF OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE.*

So many natives of India now come every year to be educated in this country—not a few of them joining the University of either Oxford or Cambridge—that a work which gives in detail all available information regarding these seats of learning cannot be otherwise than welcome to many a student. The system adopted is, as the name implies, that of a dictionary, every subject being given under the various letters of the alphabet, so that, for example, a person wishing to ascertain the expense of a college career will only need to turn to the letter “E,” where a complete résumé will be found of all the various items which suck up the annual total of pounds, shillings, and pence, amongst which, it may be added, the first mentioned largely preponderate. We strongly recommend this little work alike for its completeness, accuracy, and simplicity.

FIRST YEAR OF SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE.†

French Ministers of Education are certainly to the manner born. Victor Duruy wrote, in three different forms, appropriate to the educational capacity of the school-classes for which each was intended, a “History of France,” unquestionably the best which has ever been printed, and which forms a text-book in many of our higher English schools. Now we have Paul Bert also coming forward as a writer of a school-manual, this time on science. Just imagine Mr. Forster, or any of his successors, writing a schoolbook!

We have nothing but praise to give to the work, its arrangement is excellent, its contents exhaustive, and, we must add, its translation, by Madame Bert, admirable, while the woodcuts are as good as could be expected on so small a scale.

One feature of the little book, which will attract notice, is the habitual use of practical demonstration. As the old Roman poet said:—

“Segnius irritant animos demissa per aurem
Quam quae sunt oculis subjecta fidelibus, et quae
Ipsi sibi tradit spectator.”

In other words, as light travels faster than sound, so do things you see make a more instantaneous (and more lasting) impression than those which you only hear. Compare the attention excited in a child by fireworks and by lessons or a sermon! M. Bert has seized this truth, and has thoroughly availed himself of it. His book has all the French precision, so valuable in scientific matters, and, if once known, we may predict for it a circulation almost rivalling that which it has attained in France, where it is to be found in nearly every school, and where half a million copies have been sold.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPER.‡

Few things have excited more animadversion among the spokesmen, in the Native Press, of Native gentlemen, likely to be candidates for the Covenanted Civil Service, than the reduction of the age of competition. It was reduced, when Lord Salisbury presided, in 1878, at the India Office, from twenty-one to nineteen. The Native contention is, that they are unfairly handicapped by the change, as they must study, in part at least, in what is to them a foreign land, subjects not always in keeping with their previous training, and must undergo a long voyage, and incur large expenses, in order to obtain a bare chance of passing the examination; that a far smaller proportion of Natives have gone up, or passed, since the change was made. Lord Kimberley has upheld Lord Salisbury's decision in this—by no means a party—matter, and, while giving all due weight to the arguments by which it is supported, we are disposed to ask how far it might be possible to introduce a regulation somewhat less Procrustean; to give Native aspirants latitude to the extent of a year or two—(many of our best European civilians, be it borne in mind, did not (p. 26) join the service at an earlier age than twenty-one or twenty-two.) It might, probably, be arranged in such a way as to give both European and Native an equal chance in the running. It seems to us that the suggestion—not a new one—has never been considered with sufficient attention to details; difficulties may not prove as insuperable as they at first sight appear.

"The English Illustrated Magazine" for 1884-5 is a handsome volume which would fittingly grace any drawing-room. The illustrations can be reckoned, not by ones or twos, but literally by scores—all of them, too, are fine, and not a few magnificent—to name one, the celebrated picture known as the "Cottage Children," by Gainsborough, is reproduced by E. Ohme with a perfection and finish which leave nothing to be desired. Under the head, too, "The horse, ancient and modern" will be found some splendid engravings of that noble animal. But why specify? The whole work is an embarras des richesses. The tales are good, the pictures are good, the printing is good, the paper is good, and finally the tout ensemble of the book is good. As a Christmas present to instruct and amuse few better selections could be made than the "English Illustrated Magazine."

TULRIPUR FAIR.†

India is a land of religious fairs, or, as they are termed in that country, "melas." Of these curious institutions, perhaps, the most remarkable is that held at Tulripur on the borders of Nepal in honour of the Goddess Deri, wife of Shiva, the Great Destroyer in the Hindu trinity. The famous temple, or rather collection of temples, covers several acres of ground, to which persons of all ages and both sexes—the old, the young, the rich, the poor, the halt, the maimed, the blind—pour in an unceasing stream, numbering in the aggregate perhaps about 100,000 souls. As one and all bring some present to conciliate their patron goddess, and many of them are prepared to sacrifice goats, lambs, and kids, the noise of these animals as they march along, the merry carols of the poor pilgrims, the bartering and sale which goes on concomitantly with the "mela," all combine to make a scene as unique as interesting. But when the poor creatures who are destined to be offered to the shrine of Deri are slaughtered, and the avenues are running with the blood of the innocent victims, the scene becomes sickening, the soul loathes such needless and useless destruction of life. Still the goddess must be conciliated; some want success in farming, some seek revenge on their neighbour, some are anxious for a son to succeed to their property, some wish to ward off the attacks of cholera, for each and for all Deri is deluged in blood and loaded with gifts. And withal the poor, simple-minded suppliants at her feet are happy; their fathers and forefathers, from time immemorial, paid their devotion at her altar, why should they be different from those gone before them? That the missionary should be present too seems natural, but it may be questioned whether on such occasions zeal should not be tempered with discretion. Men's minds are undoubtedly more susceptible at these times to religious influence, but they are, too, more inflammable. A word in season may be desirable and efficacious, yet, if the opportunity be not fitting, evil may ensue rather than good. But the reader must form his own opinion as to whether Mr. Badley, about whose zeal there can be no question, was equally happy in his actions and consideration towards the failings of the poor ignorant villagers who flocked to worship a goddess they feared, and to deprecate an image of a being whom they had been taught to dread.

THE EXPEDITION TO BURMA.

THE news from Burma, which will be found in another column, stops for the present, as regards any action of importance, with the fall, last Tuesday, of Menhla, which appears to have been the result of a plucky affair, one, too, in which the gallant bearing of the Native regiments; as yet untried in serious warfare, left nothing to be desired. The capture of three Italians—men of which nation are stated by Mr. Minard Carnmell, in a recent letter to the Times, to have acted as colonels of the regiments which he saw reviewed by the King at Mandalay in 1880—will be a sensible loss to Thebaw. It will be seen that it was by Italians that the sunken barge which almost destroyed the Kathleen launch, was blown up, and many of them are doubtless in the King's employ.

It would be premature to feel any uneasiness at the absence of more recent intelligence from General Prendergast, when we read that "Press telegrams from the seat of war have been stopped." We consider this a very short-sighted step. It can only give rise to bazaar rumours of reverses which have not occurred, and are, it is hoped, unlikely to happen. It is, however, to be remembered that the Expedition is, in any case, "travelling beyond telegraphs."

The continuity of history is curiously illustrated by the fact, that our first, and, now, what is, probably, our last, intercourse with the King of Burma as an independent Sovereign, were both due to the real, or apprehended, machinations of the French. As Aitchison's Treaties show, our first Embassy to Burma, in 1795, was sent, under Captain Michael Symes, "For the purpose of strengthening the political and commercial relations of the British Government with the Court of Ava, and of preventing the French from gaining a footing in Burma." Again, in 1806-7, Captain Canning was deputed to Rangoon "To endeavour to obtain some apology from the Burmese Court for their past insolence, and to ascertain if the French were establishing any interest in Burma."

Since 1826, our possession of a considerable portion of the seaboard formerly belonging to the King, and, since 1853, our occupation of the whole of it, have prevented any overt attempts on the part of foreign nations, at interference with our interests in Burma, though commercial treaties were entered into with various European Governments. It is the French attempt to influence Thebaw by the expectation held out to him of help from the Tonquin side—from behind, literally backstair influence—which has now again brought the King into hostile contact with us, and which will undoubtedly cause a very great change in our relations with the country.

LORD GEORGE HAMILTON AND MR. DIGBY.

WE have received from Mr. Digby a letter requesting us to publish his rejoinder to the comments of Sir G. Birdwood on the charges brought against Lord George Hamilton during his electioneering campaign now in progress. Our worthy C.I.E. asks this as a matter of justice, and we do not disguise that, despite its inordinate length, we might have been tempted to meet the discomfited combatant's wishes; but on perusal of the communication in question, it appeared that, under cover of a reply to the arguments of his opponent, the opportunity is taken of making a second, and by no means more temperate, attack upon the noble lord who is seeking the suffrages of the electors of Middlesex. In these circumstances we do not feel called upon to lend our assistance in casting mud at a statesman of high rank and position, who has for years been before the public, or in helping to circulate a document, the tone of which is, to our view, as reprehensible as its object is transparent. We cannot consent to dance to Mr. Digby's piping. Of course our friend will pose that he is unfairly treated—the more so that it has been thought fit to publish in our columns Sir George Birdwood's reply. What vials of wrath will be emptied on our devoted head; but, at a time when the torrent of polemical aspersions flows unchecked and unrestrained, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that they who in electioneering contests steer clear of strong language and personal abuse will find amongst the sober-minded portion of the community a degree of sympathy which is not extended to their more blatant but less convincing rivals.

We could have hoped, with this explanation, to have taken leave of a quarrel which is too one-sided to excite much interest in the public at large; to witness an elephant break a fly is not very entertaining to the "oi polloi" of this mundane sphere, but, on reperusing Mr. Digby's letter, we find that the article in our issue of last week is characterised as the "reverse of truth." Strange! because we had been wont to think that such a charge could only hold good in cases where facts are stated which are not facts, or circumstances narrated which are not circumstances; whereas the whole of our remarks was composed of opinions and advice, the conclusion comes with irresistible force that the same brush which is used to bedaub Sir George Birdwood, is made to do duty in the no less congenial task of besmearing poor misguided Allen's Indian Mail. Well, it is something to be sent to perdition in good company. Perhaps, however, Mr. Digby is angry because it was pointed out that he had been crushed by an adversary far too strong for him, or perchance he is vexed that it should have been supposed that he could by an ill chance have been "hoist with his own petard." We are not careful to inquire. But we will be generous, and afford him an opportunity of rehabilitating his character for acumen and sagacity. So we gladly analyse his present rejoinder:—

1. Sir George Birdwood is of opinion that famines are scourges in the hands of the Supreme Disposer of events. Mr. Digby holds, on the contrary, that no matter what Providence may ordain, man (that is presumably our C.I.E. himself) can be more than a match for the Ruler of the universe. If this be so then, indeed, to quote the words of St. Paul, "is our faith vain." But we now understand, and are not likely to forget, that when a decree issues from the portals of fate it is not valid unless countersigned by Mr. Digby, C.I.E.! This is, indeed, a new and passing strange doctrine.

2. Sir George Birdwood further argues that, though the public debt of the Indian Empire has increased, still, as a portion of the expenditure has been devoted to reproductive public works, the burden of taxation has been decreased. His opponent describes this as a "snippet paragraph," and characterises the argument as "abhorred of all Indian publicists," and yet in the simplicity of our minds we had fancied that reduction of taxation was a thing "understood of the people" and no less appreciated. But perhaps we are "snippety" and not "publicists."

3. Sir George Birdwood also states that the increase to military charges was in part due to the heavy cost of provisions during years of scarcity and famine. The "retort courteous" is that "the pretext is flimsy," but obviously a Government that can control the Ruler of the universe would have no difficulty in arranging that in times of dearth prices shall not rise. This is a mere bagatelle to a colossal mind.

4. Sir George Birdwood yet again pleads that, on the average, throughout the whole of India salt is lower in price, as regards the consumer, than during any period of which there is any record. The rejoinder is that it is dearer in Madras and Bombay, which has never been denied. Mr. Digby may be a first-rate electioneering agent, but where, oh where, is his logic?

5. Sir George Birdwood further points out that the License-tax on trades could not possibly fall upon Government servants who are not "traders." Mr. Digby first of all explains that, when he said Imperial License-tax, he meant Municipal License-tax, and adds that it needed only a word to be added to make it apply to Government officials. Verily this takes the breath away; poor benighted people might—and many do—think not only that Municipal taxation is in the hands of the various Municipalities, but that the Government has no direct control in the matter; however, were it otherwise, how in the name of all that is wonderful could the latter by a stroke of the pen make persons what they are not? Verily Mr. Digby would make a "powerful" Viceroy.

6. "The war with Afghanistan was unequal," says Mr. Digby, and adds finally—thank God it is finally—"that in one district alone the cultivated area has decreased by one quarter since 1875." Silence on the part of Sir George Birdwood is the "silence of acquiescence." Poor discensolate knight! how sad he must feel, and withal how his fingers must have itched to have annihilated his antagonist in these as in the other instances.

We had written in our last issue that it would be impossible to conceive a reply more crushing than that on which we had been led to comment; but we acknowledge our error. We did not anticipate that a combatant so utterly worsted would wish to return to the fray. Yet, forsooth, battered, disfigured, and in tatters, he has tried another round—the "pluck" was unexceptionable, but none the less was the result inevitable. To write a book, we are told, on high authority, is to place a weapon in the hands of our adversary, but what can be said of the danger of indicting two literary effusions? Let Mr. Digby's fate afford an answer.

What our discomfited champion may think on sober afterthought as to the part he has played in this political duel, would afford an interesting subject for reflection. It is sufficient, however, for our purpose to bear in mind that a thrust is not less effective because it is delivered with fairness, nor is it more harmless because framed with courtesy, while, as we have already said, all persons—and they are many—who object to any attempts to draw India into the arena of party politics, owe a debt of gratitude to Sir George Birdwood, whose decisive victory is as welcome to moderate men as it is distressing to mere partisans holding that all is fair in war and elections.

May we, however, again venture to give a word of advice to Mr. Digby, who evidently stands in need of cautious and sensible counsel. Perhaps he will be angry as before, but even at that risk we venture to urge him, the next time he enters the lists, to select a champion unfamiliar with his subject and hazy as to his facts. It would, too, be more discreet to single out as the object of attack a culprit who might possibly be guilty of the charges imputed to him, not, as in this instance, a nobleman who having been powerless to control, must of necessity have been unable to prevent. We would say also to Mr. Digby—Memor esto beneficii—have at least one kind word for your patron, the nobleman to whom you are indebted for the honour which Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to bestow upon you; but, above all, if you are anxious to avoid all chances of misconception, refrain from making sweeping charges when votes are "wanted" and party interests are at stake. "Cæsar's wife must not only be pure, but above suspicion." Yet once again, on bended knees, thank the fates that you have fallen into the hands of an adversary as generous as he is powerful, a victor who can stay the uplifted sword, and spare the vanquished foe. Learn wisdom and gain experience. And when at any time you are tempted to tread afresh the arena of political warfare, inscribe on your banner the only motto which will stand you in good stead, "Sans peur et sans reproche."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 13th inst.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad the 11th inst.

Our latest news is contained in the telegrams of the Times correspondents. We had learnt on the 26th that Pagan and Myingyan had been taken after a by no means vigorous defence, and that both Chinese and Burmans hail the arrival of the British with delight. To-day's news takes us no farther than Myingyan, fifty miles beyond Pagan, and eighty-five from Mandalay, which would, it was hoped, be reached in four days more. The instructions given to the Political officer, Colonel Sladen, as to the future of the country have not been allowed to transpire; and we read in the Times of to-day:—

The absence of an announcement of a definite policy as to the future government of the country acts injuriously, and prevents the Burmese from joining us. If it were immediately announced that the country would henceforward remain under British rule, no opposition need be feared from the mass of the population. The Viceroy's proclamation announces Theebaw's deposition, but does not declare by whom he will be succeeded. Until this be done the Burmese will not join us. The accounts of the vengeance inflicted after the Treaty of Yandaboo on all the Burmans who had then assisted the English still linger in the memory of the people, and they fear a recurrence of this treatment.

The Burmah Herald, the principal vernacular newspaper, advocates annexation.

"From General Prendergast, 27th November, 1885.

"Myingyan.—On afternoon of 24th fleet approached Myingyan. Enemy visible in force about two miles inland and batteries on left bank of river. Naval Brigade and Royal Artillery went forward and engaged enemy at 4 P.M., and continued in action until after dark.

"On 25th prepared to land troops, but position was found to be evacuated during the night. Twenty guns of small calibre destroyed. The batteries were the most formidable as yet encountered.

"Casualties:—First-class petty officer Cooper, H.M.S. Turquoise, severely wounded; Private A. T. Bayley, R.M.L.I., severely wounded.

"Five hundred men and two guns garrison Myingyan. Priests and people seem content. Fleet proceeded northward."

"From Viceroy, 28th November, 1885.

"Prendergast occupied Pagan and Myingyan with slight opposition. Petty Officer Cooper, Turquoise, and Private A. J. Bayley, Marines, wounded severely.

"Officers wounded at Minhla doing well; Wilkinson out of danger."

"Prendergast says:—

"We have fresh and unmistakable evidence that our advance in force is looked upon by the people as a deliverance from past and present evils. They are flocking back into the town, from which they say they were driven by the extortions of the Mandalay soldiers.

"Priests and people say openly they willingly accept English rule, and hope for its speedy establishment."

On the occasion of the Viceroy's visit to Jeypoor he highly (and deservedly) complimented the Maharajah on his enlightened rule, and remarked that he had great pleasure in announcing that the Government, recognising the ability of the present Maharajah, had determined to invest him with full administrative powers. It was, the Viceroy said, his policy to assume towards the Native Princes an attitude of unlimited trust and confidence, and to abstain as much as possible from irritating and unnecessary interference with what was every day becoming their enlightened and praiseworthy rule. Lord Dufferin next visits Bhurtpoor and Gwalior.

LAST Sunday there was a serious riot at Broach. A body of the Talanias tribe of Aborigines, led by an ascetic, went to the Collector's house to obtain a site for a temple. Stirred up by evil-disposed persons, they, failing to find the Collector, turned back and met Mr. Prescott, the district superintendent of police, who was returning from a drive. They pulled him from his carriage and beat him so severely that he died three hours later. They then plundered the police-station and took away several swords, and marched through the city. On arriving at the railway-station they were met by the Bombay police, whom they attacked. The rioters were, however, repulsed, losing five of their number, whereupon they broke and fled. Several arrests have been made, and the city is now quiet. Three policemen were dangerously wounded.

As yet, says the Correspondent above quoted, telegraphing yesterday, no particulars have been received here of the sudden rebellion in Nepal, but it is stated that the Prime Minister has been assassinated, and that the young Maharajah is in the hands of the rebels. The fact that the British Resident, Colonel Berkeley, was absent from Khatmunda on a tour shows that the disturbance was quite unexpected.

FROM the same source we have the welcome news that:—

Sir F. Roberts arrived in Bombay on Tuesday last. He there met Sir D. Stewart, and at once took over the command of the Indian Army. General Stewart left India in the mail steamer on Friday. His departure being private was marked by no ceremony, but a large number of officers and others assembled to bid him farewell.

THE Afghan Boundary Commission were to leave Zulfikar for Gonz-i-Khan, via Akrobat, on the 24th.

WE learn from Teheran, under date 26th, that, as might have been supposed, Ayoub Khan, the Afghan pretender, acting doubtless at the instigation of Russia, has refused to be bound any longer by the arrangement made between England and Persia. He will consequently be subjected to the same police supervision as formerly, but he will not be imprisoned.

THE Electrician says:—

We have good reason to believe that the present Government has, during its already short tenure of office, considered very carefully the advisability and possibilities of connecting by cables completely under English control most of our outlying dependencies not yet so connected. Several plans have been suggested so as to obtain as far as possible alternative routes, and not to be compelled to depend solely upon single cables. We have for a long time strongly advocated the adoption of some system, and trust that the work will be vigorously pushed forward.

WE had occasion, a few weeks ago, to remark on the large number of victims to the attacks of wild beasts and reptiles, and the last Report, that for 1884, does not indicate much improvement.

The number of human lives destroyed by wild animals and venomous snakes during the year 1884, decreased slightly, from 22,905 in the previous year to 22,425. This decrease was common to all provinces except Bengal, British Burmah, and Coorg. Of the total number of deaths in the year, 2,795 were caused by wild animals and 19,629 were due to snake-bite. As usual, Bengal and N.W.P. and Oudh account for upwards of 75 per cent. of the total mortality.

WE have received the report for the year 1884-5 of the Sassoon Mechanics' Institute, of Bombay, an excellent institution which, a few years since, was nearly dying of inanition, but which, owing to the exertions of an active Secretary, has been raised to a position of prosperity. The reading-room, containing a good selection of English papers and magazines, is well attended, the entertainments command full audiences, and the number of members is on the increase. Go on and prosper, Sassoon Mechanics' Institute; we wish there were "more of your sort."

WE learn from Nature that telegraphs are extending with extraordinary rapidity over Southern China. At the present moment Peking, in the far North, is connected by a direct line thorough Canton with Lungchow, on the frontier of Tonquin, the extension from Canton to the latter place having been made during the recent war, purely for military purposes. We have thus one great line stretching through the Chinese empire from north to south, and at the present moment an important line is being constructed along the southern borders of China, through the provinces of Kwangtung, Kwangsi, and Yunnan. Starting from Nanking, in Kwangsi, where it joins the Canton-Lungchow line, it will extend for nearly 600 miles to Nung-lik, in South Yunnan, running for half the distance along the Yukiang, the name of the Canton river in its upper course. The work is being carried out by the Chinese themselves, with the assistance of one European, and it is stated that during the recent war the Canton authorities equipped a complete field telegraph staff, the members of which were so thoroughly trained, that they have been able to put up thirty-five miles of line in a single day for war purposes. Telegraphs have now secured a firm footing in China, and their extension over the whole country is a matter of time only.

READERS may be interested to know that the Englishman of Nov. 3 contains (at p. 17) a complete list of Europeans residing at Mandalay to the 8th of October. We regret to see that they number no less than eighty-three, chiefly Eurasians, Armenians, Italians, and French. It is not known how many have taken refuge on board our steamers.

As is natural enough, the elections now in progress here have for some time past occupied much of the attention of the Native Press, and we cull from the Voice of India expressions of opinion from journals in the three Presidencies.

The Charu Varta (Bengali Weekly), Mymensing, says:—"Parliament is our last hope. There cannot be any real improvement in India, unless an interest can be created in the public opinion of England on Indian affairs; nor will our object be attained without it on political or any questions affecting India. Unless an Indian party be organised in Parliament, there can be no hope of bettering the administration of India. It is as much a necessity to send delegates to England for the agitation of Indian questions as it is essential to agitate our principal grievances through the English Press."

The Swadesa Mitran (Tamil Weekly), Madras, remarks:—"If the Russians had not reached the Afghan frontier, intent on mischief, the present keen interest evinced by the people of England in Indian affairs would never have been a reality. Unless we avail ourselves of this opportunity to acquaint the British public with our claims and grievances, no good can result from this. It would be very desirable to have more members who take interest in Indian affairs in Parliament. It would insure our lasting good. It is with that view that so much trouble is being taken to get them into that great assembly."

The Subodha Sindhu of Khandwa (Marathi-Hindi Weekly) is glad to see the Indians now taking further steps in political affairs, which are calculated to bear good fruit in a reasonable course of time; it approves of the appeal made to the electors of Great Britain; and states that "the Indians have nothing to do with political parties, the difference between whom should not affect us much. India wants true friends."

The Jam-e-Jamshed (Gujarati Daily), Bombay, says:—"Our main complaint is that the annual budget of crores of rupees is not even submitted for discussion in the Legislative Council, and that Government thinks it expedient to recoup any amount of increased expenditure by any tax it pleases to impose. We do not want the formation of a Parliament in India after the model of England for the passing of our Budget; but we ask that the Government should consult the views of Natives as to any increase in the expenditure, or on the occasion of the imposition of new taxes."

The Rast Goftar (Gujarati Weekly), Bombay, thinks that the appeal as jointly penned by the Poona Sarvajanik Sabha, the Bombay Presidency Association, the Karachi Sind Sabha, and the Calcutta Indian Association, is a cleverly indited and complete political exposition of the wants and aspirations of India, and of the rights and hopes of her people. Our contemporary, the Times of India, takes exception to some of the demands in the appeal, but we believe that each and every prayer of this appeal, which is nothing less than an elaborate "manifesto" on behalf of India, is justifiable, and the loyal and moderate language in which it is couched enhances the justice of the several prayers embodied in the appeal.

As is well known, the French have a colony here and there, rarea nantes, in gurgite vasto of India. These little places have (what they do not seem to think) the "priceless boon" of direct representation in the Home Parliament. The Englishman tells us that—

The peaceful little colony of Chandernagor took little interest in the recent election of a deputy to represent the French East Indies. Only 345 out of 5,000 registered electors took the trouble to record their votes, the figures standing—84 for Pierre Alype, and 261 for Maurice Rouvier. The Petit Bengali bemoans the sad indifference of the electoral body, and declares that the people of Bengal have no interest in public affairs, in spite of their infatuation over Local Self-Government. According to French experience, even when municipal matters are at stake, it requires force bâchées et voiture to bring together a thousand electors. Our own Baboos may find food for profitable meditation in this extract.

Chit Chat.

A CERTAIN old lady having a letter to post was advised to take it to a pillar-box. But she returned disconsolate, for, after thumping away for several minutes, she came to the conclusion that everybody was out.

THE Minister at Haidarabad is about to give a fancy dress ball, but as the notice is to be short, ladies are recommended to get their dresses in hand at once. If you are sure of an invitation, well and good, but how about those fair matrons who get garments, but are left out in the cold shades of opposition when the eventful evening arrives.

To be told "to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" is the usual formula in a court of justice, but when the words "and take care that it is the whole truth" are added with marked emphasis the witness has a right to complain. So there was a "row" in court between Colonel Birch, the Deputy Commissioner of Sialkote, and Mr. Homan, a district superintendent of police, who more than hinted that he objected to an insinuation that he was concocting evidence. The end of the matter has not yet transpired.

"THE neighbourhood of Yokohama," says the Japan Weekly Mail, "has been the locale of considerable seismic activity." This is a grand way of explaining that there have been some slight shock of earthquake.

THE Japanese have no notion of time, and well it may be so, since they have no watches.

THE influence of the different styles of music on the appetite has been minutely observed by the manager of the refreshment department at some classical concerts at Chicago, U.S. Wagner creates a demand for lager beer, Strauss so exhilarates the hearers that they call out for champagne, and Mendelssohn takes away the appetite altogether; "for," says the manager, "on Mendelssohn nights nobody wants any ham sandwiches; and, as I make 85 per cent. out of them, I guess I don't think much of Mr. Mendelssohn."

FOR many years Bhopal has been deemed a model State in Central India, and the Begum who governs the Principality is oft quoted as a model of what a ruler should be. But a change has come over the spirit of the scene; and loud complaints of misgovernment and oppression have been of late so rife that the Government have thought it incumbent upon them to interfere. The result of the inquiries which were instituted satisfied them that matters were wrong, and, as a consequence, the Nawab Consort was degraded and deprived of the salute of seventeen guns which he was wont to receive when in British territory.

THE Pioneer is very bitter against Mr. G. E. Knox, because, after months of delay, he has given to the world a most confused and incomprehensible account of his stewardship as Legal Remembrancer to Government of N.W.P. and Oudh. "If seven months of extra labour bestowed upon the report of 1881," thus writes the indignant editor, "produce this result, perhaps it might be as well to try what punctuality can do."

BUT more serious is the circumstance which the Report discloses that in the Provinces of N.W.P. and Oudh, litigation, so far as Government is concerned, is conducted on so loose and erratic a fashion that the authorities are pretty generally losers of the day.

A GREAT deal has been heard of late as to the development of the wheat trade in the Punjab, but the progress made falls far short of the extraordinary advance in the export of oil seeds, which rose from a million maunds (88lbs.) in 1882-83 to nearly five and a-half millions in 1884-85.

It has been decided at Bombay that if you have pains in your inside "you may quaff eau de Cologne" and water ad libitum as a medicine. Of course if it were taken as an intoxicant the drinker would be amenable to the Courts. What a strange thing is law!

THE band of zealots known to fame as the Anti-Opium Society are in a sore plight. Recent diplomatic arrangements with the Chinese Government have deprived them of their unwarranted, but convenient cry that the British Government forced the drug on the poor hapless Celestials; but so utterly unblushing would be the untruth were this contention still to be put forward for general acceptance, that even the Anti Opium Society blushes at the attempt. It will be interesting to see what new-fangled notion will now be set up as a raison d'être for getting money out of the pockets of Exeter Hall, et hoc genus omne.

At the Darjiling fancy dress ball some of the characters were somewhat perplexing. What, for instance, must a fair lady put on to appear as "O, my!" What, again, constitutes a "solicitor," so far as such an occasion is concerned? Then there was "Monte Carlo," an utterly incomprehensible character, and "powder"—well, that was, of course, a Girl of the Period, who is, as a rule, an animated mass of "cosmetic"—also, too, are "Auntie Peg," "Chef," "Incrayable," "himself." The last-mentioned character would appear to demand ordinary attire, the object of fancy dress being that a man should not be himself but someone else.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CLAIMS OF ISHMAEL.*

The author, J. D. Bate, M.R.A.S., of the Baptist Missionary Society, Allahabad, made his first appearance in the field of Indian literature as the compiler of Bate's Hindi Dictionary, a work which is in use in the Government Schools of the N.W. Provinces. He is also a member of the Committee of Missionaries of all societies now engaged in revising the translation of the Bible into the Hindi language. With the claims of Ishmael Mr. Bate publicly enters the arena of what is known as the Mahomedan controversy.

In the Preface the author acknowledges the wealth and merit of the existing literature upon this subject; and throughout the book the reader is referred to the works of such eminent and exhaustive writers as the Europeans: Gibbon, Niebuhr, Palgrave, Forster, Arnold, Deutsch, Sale and Muir; and the Orientals, Syed Ahmed Khan and Syed Amir Ali.

Considerable sections of the "Claims of Ishmael" are, indeed, written in direct reply to the arguments of one of the last-named writers, the Hon. Syed Ahmed Khan Bahadur, in his brilliant essays on Muhammad.

These and other authors notwithstanding, Mr. Bate claims that the theme of his book, as defined in the title page, and viewed from the standpoint he has selected, has never yet been specifically and separately treated of by any advocate of Christianity. That theme is the Mussulman dogma that Ishmael, not Isaac, was the "child of promise" (of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures), through whose descendants all mankind is to be blessed, a dogma whose importance consists in its being the ground of the crucial Muhammadan doctrine that Muhammad, child of Ishmael, and not Jesus, descendant of Isaac, is the heaven-appointed vehicle of the promised blessing.

The question whether Ishmael was or was not the child of promise is matter of such long-standing dispute—being in fact as old as the birth of Islam—and has been handled by so many writers, that at first glance Mr. Bate's claim to be the first Christian advocate by whom it has been specifically and separately treated is rather startling. When, however, it is borne in mind that the "Claims of Ishmael" is written from a specific standpoint, that of the Christian missionary in controversy with the followers of Muhammad, and is designed to be a vade-mecum, or compendious guide, in which alike the educated Mussulman and the English student may read all that has been said from the Christian side on this particular matter, it will be found no easy task to lay the hand on any other volume that fulfils this purpose; and few will be prepared to deny the value of Mr. Bate's contribution to the subject.

For one important point in the discussion, Mr. Bate possesses a qualification beyond what mere scholarship can confer; he is able to speak from close personal experience of the beliefs and religious attitude of one large section of the Muhammadan world, the Mussulmans of India.

With respect to the spirit in which the "Claims of Ishmael" is written, the author gives expression to some severe strictures upon the methods of argument adopted by Muslims (vide pp. 4, 5, 14, 44, et altera), even going the length of charging Muhammadan apologists with fabricating traditions, and preventing facts in the interest of their faith. On the whole, however, a spirit of fair dealing and friendliness characterises the book, which goes far to support Mr. Bate's assertion in the preface, that any apparent harshness of judgment is due, "not to a desire to hurt any fellow-traveller in the path of life, but to a desire to discount that only which every rational man, whatever may be his creed, must desire to see destroyed."

Mr. Bate's system of spelling Oriental names will be regarded as peculiar. We have, it is true, been accustomed to see the name of the Muslim prophet rendered, as here—Muhammad; but it is less easy to recognise the places of his birth and burial under the spellings, Mikkā (pronounced Mückka), and Mādīnā (Müdeena), and that of the Muslim Scripture under the curious combination, Qur'an. For these departures from traditional spelling, Mr. Bate gives clear and scholarly reasons; and remembering how little agreement there is amongst Oriental scholars upon the subject, one feels the justice of the author's remarks in the preface: "All that is needed is an intelligent principle of transliterating clearly carried through."

Space would not allow of any detailed examination of Mr. Bate's line of argument. It is based almost wholly on records acknowledged in the "Koran" to be genuine, and on facts of history open to all. The first division consists of evidence to prove that the "Koran" nowhere distinctly declares Ishmael to be the child of promise, whilst distinctly vouching for the authenticity of those very Scriptures which declare in favour of Isaac; that the Hades, or Mussulman traditions, which connect Abraham and Ishmael with the history of Mecca, are unfounded; and that the boasted descent of Muhammad from Ishmael has never been proved. In the second division the claims of Ishmael are examined in the double light of Jewish prediction and history—sacred and profane; and an endeavour is made to show that the predictions made of old to Abraham, Sarah, and Hagar in relation to Isaac and Ishmael have been precisely fulfilled in the character and history, both of the men themselves and of their descendants, the Jews and Badawis. These lines of thought lead inevitably to a consideration of the question, how far Islam has been and is a source of blessing to mankind?

Old as is the inquiry, it is continually receiving fresh illustration from passing events and the narratives of recent travellers in Muhammadan territories; and however ungrateful may be the task of exposing the ill-tendencies and evil results of an alien religious system, so long as Muhammadans claim that Islam is the appointed vehicle of universal blessing to mankind, so long the plain facts referred to by Mr. Bate must be kept before the eyes of the world. There is, of course, a vast difference between charging upon a religious system the frailties of its followers, and calling attention to those broad results which show its inherent tendency for good and evil. No candid reader will accuse Mr. Bate of confounding these two methods of criticism, or employing any but the latter. This section of the book is mainly a reply to Syed Ahmed Khan's able essay, "The Benefits of Islam to Human Society."

The third and last section of the "Claims of Ishmael" is principally occupied in comparing the teaching of the Pentateuch and the "Koran" in regard to the character of Isaac.

Considered as to literary style Mr. Bate's work is open to obvious criticisms. The language is laboured, wordy, and often obscure; there are careless slips in composition and grammar, and the author has an unfortunate habit of repetition, possibly contracted in bazaar-preaching, possibly the result of hasty composition. Allowances are, of course, to be made for a busy man, writing at leisure moments only, in a hot climate, and surrounded by conditions unfavourable to accurate English composition; but such circumstances suggest their own remedy—thorough competent revision by a European not resident in India; and this is, to all appearance, what the book before us has lacked. Sentences such as the following, p. 130:—"In this instance, therefore, he is merely indulging in the harmless amusement of setting up a man-of-straw for the sake of the mild gratification of knocking it down again"—are a mere waste of words and space, besides being hardly in good taste in a serious argument.

As specimens of grammatical inaccuracy, we notice on p. 47 the crude blunder, "The burden of proof rests with those which deny it;" and on p. 201 the unallowable phrase "in connection with the both cases." Again, on p. 288, the connection of sentences is observed by the heedless use of "hence" for "but"—a species of careless diction that occurs more than once.

Instances of the repetition complained of above are easy to find. The fine passage from Sir W. Muir on the fabrication of Muslim tradition, quoted on p. 4, is repeated in part on p. 36, and for nearly the same purpose. In one of the best passages in the book, the comparison of Ishmael's descendants with the Eastern "onager" (Gen. xvi., 12, he will be a "wild-ass" man) we find on opposite pages such reflections as the following:—

(1). P. 149, "With the view of putting ourselves into position for a more adequate realization of the force of the analogy, he will look carefully at the creature mentioned by the angel." P. 150, "How strikingly suited this animal was for the purpose of comparison in the present instance will be readily apprehended if we note a little closely some of its habits and characteristics."

(2). P. 150, "In general outline it is distinguished from the ordinary ass by its greater length and by the finer form of its limbs. . . .” P. 151, “He differs from his relation as known to us, by the greater length of his body and the finer form of his limbs.”

* "An Examination of the Claims of Ishmael," as viewed by Muhammadans (being the first chapter of Section I. of Studies of Islam.) By J. D. Bate, M.R.A.S.

Again, the course of thought is interrupted by digressions, such as that on the idol Hubal and divination—pp. 15-27—which, however scholarly and interesting, have no such connection with the argument as to merit a position in the context, and would indeed be more effective if condensed into a couple of half-pages of footnote.

Any who may consider these criticisms trivial or too nice should bear in mind that this book, which contains 352 good-sized pages, is only the first chapter of the first section of the first series of the works which Mr. Bate hopes to publish; that it is designed as a vade-mecum for students; and that it consists of that close and sustained reasoning which no writer can afford to obscure by faults of diction or the introduction of extraneous matter. Moreover, the “Claims of Ishmael” is Mr. Bate’s first published production upon Islām—it would be matter of no small regret if the literary defects of the present valuable treatise should continue through the series. How seriously such apparently slight faults do really affect the readableness of a book, any reader of this work will realize in the feeling of ease and relief he will experience on arriving at any lengthened quotation (of which there are several) from writers of clearer style.

With all possible respect for the ability, scholarship, and industry, of which there is abundant evidence in the “Claims of Ishmael,” we would strongly urge Mr. Bate to submit his MSS. to more thorough revision before again going to press; and we do this with the full confidence that “The Studies in Islām” will, when the series is completed, not only be highly appreciated by those classes of readers for whom in particular it is intended, but also take a high place amongst the literary productions of this century on Muhammadan controversy.

Arminius Vambéry has produced a boys’ edition of his well-known “Life and Adventures,” a work which has been received by the public with a degree of approbation which is seldom withheld from the successful traveller in lone lands and little known climes. But Vambéry was not an ordinary man. He started in life with no advantage, nay, rather with every disadvantage—he was poor, lame, and friendless.

Yet he contrived to acquire such a proficiency in languages that, in a salon in Paris, he carried on a conversation with ten persons, each of whom spoke a different tongue; while, as regards his weak frame, to use his own quaint words, “I did not walk in Central Asia upon my legs but upon my tongue.” His poverty, too, did not stand in his light, for he travelled as a wandering dervish, suiting his dress and language to the various regions where he chanced to arrive, and thus he begged his way right through Asia Minor, Persia, and the then little known regions of Central Asia. His dangers, his adventures, his hair-breadth escapes read almost like fairy tales, yet withal so marvellously did he maintain his character and his assumed nationalities that, though here and there suspicions were raised, no one succeeded in detecting the European in the guise of the Asiatic. That boys might read with advantage a book which shows in a strong light the advantages of diligence and industry, can scarce be questioned, and the more so that in this instance a man whose name is a household word throughout the civilised world, a traveller who was in his day the lion of the salons of Europe, a linguist second in attainments to no living contemporary, is content to pass life quietly and happily in the bosom of his family on a modest pittance of £200 per annum, and the income derived from his books.

BURMESE EXPEDITION.

THE news which reaches us from Burma indicates a much slower rate of progress than had been anticipated; and the old capital, where the Burmese are expected to make a stand, is said to be strongly fortified, and it will be seen by the telegrams which we publish elsewhere that, even if not detained there, the troops were not expected to reach Mandalay in less than four days. The account of the present Capital which we reprint from the Englishman may be supplemented by a later description of Theebaw's last attempts at strengthening, not the town, but the enceinte of his own palace. A contemporary is informed as follows :—

It appears that King Theebaw has been making great preparations for a last stand in the palace at Mandalay. As soon as he heard that the English Government meant to take up the case of the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation, large gangs of men were set to work in and around the palace. Many houses were cleared away so as to secure a clear space round the palisades, and both inside and out all material likely to be of use to an escalading party was removed. In addition to this, carpenters were employed to strengthen the ten-foot high stockade which surrounds the palace grounds. Fresh backing was put in, and extra cross-pieces set up to resist a direct attack. Numbers of cannon have also been got into position on the southern and western fronts. They are of every variety of calibre; but some of them might offer a stubborn resistance in capable hands. "The soldiery also," we quote from a letter written from Mandalay in the end of October, "are quite confident that they will defeat all who dare to face them; and there is an air of cheerfulness and alacrity in all these warlike preparations which augurs ill for the peace of the country."

There were then available for immediate service six asooos of the Palace Guard. An asoo numbers 1,800 men. The whole had been placed under the command of the Kin Woon-Min-gyee, the Minister who was most energetic in advocating peace. No doubt the number has been greatly increased since, for the whole male population of the country is liable to military service; and soldiers and their households are exempted from taxation. Nevertheless Mandalay ought to fall very easily; for the hill to the north of the town completely commands both palace and city, and is almost within rifle range. No attempt has been made to fortify this sacred hill, and even if stockades have since been run up it ought not to be a very hard matter to take it, if it is judiciously shelled first. Captains Comotto (once an Italian naval officer) and Molinari, now prisoners in our hands, represented the entire Burmese scientific services, so that there are hardly likely to be any very elaborate preparations made against our troops. A party will no doubt march overland from Amarapura to cut off the Burmese retreat eastwards towards the Shan hills. Another will be landed above the town so as to take Mandalay Hill, and thus the war ought to be finished at one blow. The palace is the arsenal of the country, and if we capture King Theebaw all resistance will collapse.

JUST as we are going to Press we receive the subjoined from the India Office :—

"From Chief Commissioner, Rangoon, 30th Nov., 1885.

"On 26th, Royal barge with flag of truce, met flotilla thirty miles below Mandalay, with letter begging for armistice. Prendergast replied, demanding surrender of King's army and Mandalay. Next morning envoy returned with orders from King to accede to all demands. Army surrendered Ava forts, twenty-eight guns, and laid down arms. Prendergast intended proceeding to Mandalay on 28th."

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY ROUTE AND ITS PROJECTOR.

WE had occasion, not long since, to recall to the attention of our readers the brilliant services of Lieutenant Waghorn, the Pioneer of the Overland Route, and the disgraceful way in which they were requited; and the recent publication, under the editorship of Mr. Lane Poole, of a very interesting "Life of General F. R. Chesney, the Projector of the kindred undertaking, the Euphrates Route to India" (W. H. Allen and Co.) induces us to refer to the similar fate experienced by this distinguished explorer. General Chesney did not, indeed, like Waghorn, die in straitened circumstances, of a broken heart; but, like him, he had to bear a great portion of the outlay (of the expedition for the exploration of the Euphrates) which the Government had encouraged him to undertake; like him remained unnoticed and undecorated (though his advice was constantly sought by successive Administrations); and though he lived to a green, and—by his many friends and the nation generally—honoured, old age, never received any substantial recognition from the Powers that be.

From the time when Alexander the Great fought and won at the Granicus and at Issus, traversing, on his way to India, Asia Minor and Syria, and debouching on the Euphrates, it has been recognised that the Euphrates Valley presents the most favourable land route to India. How far the possession by Russia of the now impregnable fortress of Kars, and of Armenia, may affect the value of a route which it would now be less difficult than in Chesney's time to cut, is a matter open to difference of opinion, but one to which we need not now further advert.

"Not Heav'n itself over the past has pow'r," and no present considerations can affect the value of the wonderful work done by Chesney, nor diminish our admiration for the almost unique combination of qualities by which he was enabled, in spite of difficulties which would have appalled any but an extraordinary man, to carry it through.

This biography has (we are informed by Mr. Lane Poole) been a labour of love on the part of the General's widow and daughter, who divided the chapters between them, who are the sole authors, and who have reason for legitimate pride in their close relationship to such a man.

Chesney was of Scotch extraction (both father and mother being settled in Ulster) and his was a father of the old "spare the rod, and spoil the child" school. It seems, to our modern luxurious notions, a Spartan discipline indeed to attach a boy to a regiment on active service (though in his own country) at nine. This soon showed of what metal the boy was made. We give but one instance from among others. His regiment, being ordered to Nowry, "Mrs. Chesney, aware of her son's warlike propensities, and very properly desirous of keeping such a mere child out of danger, took away his boots and stockings after he had gone to bed, and the detachment marched without him. Francis, however, who neither then nor at any subsequent period could be deterred by any surmountable difficulty from what he considered the path of duty, feeling greatly aggrieved at not being allowed to accompany his corps into active service, walked barefoot the whole twenty miles; and, greatly to the surprise of his father, put in an appearance while the officers were at mess, where he was, of course, received with acclamation." A boy so full of pluck (or, as he modestly called it, "confidence") was not likely to hesitate in finding his way alone from Ireland to Woolwich (where his father had procured him a nomination) at the age of fourteen, nor in getting his commission.

A visit to Turkey, in 1828-9, during the Russo-Turkish war, introduced him for the first time to the unchangeable East; and a kind of roving commission in Egypt and Syria, given him by the British Ambassador at Constantinople, who seems to have formed a high opinion of his vigour and intelligence, took him to Alexandria, where a circumstance occurred which changed the current of his thoughts and the direction of the greater part of his career.

Thomas Love Peacock, of the India House, a man of rare and varied attainments, whose books are now but too little read, and whose services to his country are all but entirely forgotten, had long meditated the possibility of reviving Alexander's route from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, or some short line of travel to India; and had drawn up a series of queries on the subject. These were handed to the young officer, who, carefully investigating, while yet in Egypt, the possibility of a Suez Canal, of which Lesseps always called him the Father,* resolved on testing the practicability of the alternative route, deciding that nothing short of absolute duty should induce him to throw up a mission fraught with such important possibilities. Carrying his life in his hand at every step, he began, mostly alone and unaided, the first of his journeys to the Euphrates. Repeatedly pillaged by various Arab tribes, he at length reached Damascus, where he joined a caravan, and, after more than three months' wanderings, finally struck "the great river, the river Euphrates," some miles from Anah, whence he proposed to make its descent, in order to be able to form, from personal observation on the spot, a trustworthy opinion as to its navigability. The narrative of his many difficulties, among which was the construction of a sheepskin-supported raft, and, later on, of a boat, is fully given in Chapter XII., and presents a vivid impression of his indomitable energy and perseverance. Pillage, sickness, loss of boats, nothing shook his resolution; and it is no wonder that, on reaching England, he was the lion of the season—a nine days' wonder. The manner, however, in which any attempt on his part to rouse the authorities to practical action was received can hardly be better exemplified than by his reception by the Court of Directors of the East India Company. When he urged the establishment of speedy communication with India as a reason for opening up the Valley route, old veterans said, "Ah; but that is the very thing we do not want. . . What is to become of us if you give us a monthly mail to India? No, no; now we write our letters, and get our answers, every six months, and have peace and leisure between whiles; life will not be worth having if you get your way!"

However, Chesney urged the point, in season and out of season, on persons more receptive of a new idea; the King (William IV.) had been impressed by the ardour of the indefatigable explorer, the mercantile interest urged that an attempt should be made, the matter was brought before a Committee of the House of Commons, an expedition (for which £20,000 were assigned) organised, and the command, with the rank of Colonel, given to Chesney.

So far well. He had overcome difficulties in the Council room and the Cabinet; he had now to encounter physical difficulties of no ordinary kind. The first step was to construct roads for the transport of the hulls, boilers, engines, and propellers of two river steamers over nearly 150 miles, from the Mediterranean shore to the Euphrates bank. We need not dilate on the difficulties of such an undertaking, which occupied ten months; and it is not a little characteristic of the Colonel, that, while he was suffering from brain fever, "during his delirium nothing was found to have so composing an effect as the noise of the riveting the steamers, which had naturally been stopped in the first instance with a view to keeping the patient quiet" (p. 305). How a storm sunk one of his steamers with the loss of most of her crew, how he at length, with the other sorely shaken vessel, arrived at Bussora, having substantiated what he had undertaken to prove, is comparatively well known, though we have never met with the story in so pleasantly narrated a form.

The formation of the Euphrates Valley Railway Company was now a foregone conclusion. It was, as we all know, due to the enlightened advocacy of Sir William Andrew, and it was at his request that Chesney, in 1856, at the age of sixty-seven, went out to Syria for the last time, in company with Sir John McNeill and other competent engineers. Not a doubt as to the practicability for a railway of even the most difficult parts was allowed to remain uninvestigated; the capital was forthcoming, and nothing but sanction, and a trifling guarantee of interest, by the Government, were wanting. But the elastic phrase "political expediency" was brought in to prevent the project being carried into effect. Nor can we help agreeing with Mr. Poole, that Foreign Powers objected to the enterprise because it would necessarily augment English influence in the East, and supply English troops with a short alternative road to India; and the Foreign Office dared not traverse the wishes of Russia and France "then, after the Crimean war, très étroitement liées. A railway through Syria to the head of the Persian Gulf . . . meant English supremacy in Hither Asia, a gradual progress of civilization and extended commerce, the development of internal resources, and the introduction of western progress in the fossilized provinces of Asiatic Turkey and Persia . . . a firm Persian alliance, and the holding of both gates of Afghanistan."

Once more, at the age of seventy-three, Chesney journeyed to Constantinople with the view of obtaining a concession for the proposed line; this he succeeded in accomplishing, and with this his life's active work may be said to have terminated, though it was not until 1868 that he, being then seventy-nine years of age, completed his last literary labour—the "Narrative" of the Euphrates

* At a meeting of the Suez Canal Company, in 1870, Lesseps introduced Chesney with the words, "Messieurs, je vous présente l'homme à qui nous devons le Canal de Suez, M. le Général Chesney, le Père du canal."—Verily, what with Chesney's alignment of the general direction of the canal, and Waghorn's subsequent careful surveys, Lesseps might truly say, without doing despite to his own ability, "Other men (and those, Englishmen) have laboured, and I have entered into their labours."

Expedition, the scientific results of which had previously been given to the public in a separate form.

Chesney's nature, which was, perhaps, just a little dour and exacting (forgetting that every-one was not, like his wiry self, made of iron), led him to record but few of the many ludicrous incidents which a life of such extended and varied travel must have produced; and the amusing account of the visit of the ladies of Baghdad to the Euphrates is from the pen of Admiral Charlewood, many of whose descriptions, and those of other members of the expedition, scattered throughout the work, are very vivid and lifelike.

The record of such a life cannot, however, fail to be instructive as well as interesting; and it can but be a subject of regret that it has not sooner been committed to print. It seems a national defect to ignore all public services which do not at once "catch the eye"; and, though no posthumous admiration can atone for life-long neglect, it is never too late to express the hope that the services of future explorers may be recognised in a very different measure from that which fell to the lot of Chesney and of Waghorn.

MANDALAY.

We excerpt from the Englishman an account of Mandalay and such fortifications as it possesses, which will at the present time be interesting:—

"The guns at Mandalay are small cast iron ones, about four feet long, with a small bore. They are placed on light gun-carriages, made after the pattern of European gun-carriages, but drawn by men. Twelve men are told off to each gun-carriage. About one hundred carriages are in good working order. Of larger cannon, mounted on gun-carriages, there are not fewer than two hundred within the Palace walls, but they have not been brought out for parade or practice for the past eight years. Two Italian officers were specially engaged to teach and drill the artillery, but for the past eighteen months this branch of the army has been much neglected, although within the past month the gunners have been under orders to turn out for exercise, only, however, with the small guns. Some of the larger cannon and carriages have been brought out and placed on the city walls, ten on each side of the city. The city of Mandalay measures about a mile on each side, and is perfectly square. The walls are of brick, and about twenty-five feet high, with a broad moat, always full of water, sixty feet wide and about thirty feet deep in the centre. The moat surrounds the city entirely. The distance from the walls to the edge of the moat is about 150 feet. There are three drawbridges on each side of the city, facing three gates. These gates are closed every night, and opened at dawn. At 6 p.m. the main gates are closed to cart and pony traffic, but a wicket is kept open for foot passengers till 9 p.m., when it is closed for the night. Each gate has usually a guard of some thirty soldiers. In addition to the so-called standing army of about fourteen thousand or fifteen thousand of all arms, there are some two thousand men reserved for war boats, which are each manned by about seventy men, and are arranged to carry fifty soldiers. During the first Burmese war these boats did great mischief, and gave the enemy the advantage of easy and rapid transport. They will, however, be of little or no use in the days of steamers and steam launches. The late King built ten gun-boats of teak under European superintendence, each boat measuring about 100 feet long and fifteen feet wide, and drawing five feet of water; but they are still in an incomplete state, only two of them, the Bandoola and Shoay Pongdaw, being fit for service. The former is armed with some eight guns, and the latter is now being made ready for service under Captain Comotto, an Italian naval officer who was unemployed for a very long time, but whose services have been brought into requisition at this important period. It is absolutely certain that these boats cannot move about on the Irrawaddy without the aid of steam, so that they are not likely to be of much use in any contingency. The King owns some ten large river steamers and one sea steamer. The latter is laid up and is quite unfit for service, and out of the ten river boats only five are in working order. Even of these, four are constantly breaking down, the only really serviceable one being the new steamer purchased from the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company about three months ago, which may be said to be in good working order. On a great emergency like the present the King of Burma is empowered to raise from the labouring classes a force of 8,000 to 10,000 men as "ahmoodans" or militia. The authorities are not likely to be very particular in their choice, but will compel old and young men to turn out—men who have never handled a musket in their lives. The present bankrupt state of the royal treasury of Burma may be said to have led to the thorough demoralisation of the military system, such as it is; and as long as the soldiers are liable to be flogged for the slightest offence, and their pay is constantly allowed to fall into arrears, it is hardly to be wondered at that the service is not only unpopular, but it is positively abhorred.

OBITUARY.

THE death of the King of Spain, within a day or two of completing his 29th year, though not wholly unexpected, cannot fail to attract attention and sympathy. Like another exiled prince, unfortunately killed by a Zulu assegai, he had studied military science at a British Military College. Prince Louis Napoleon's death has materially affected the political outlook in France; but there is much reason to fear that the effects of the death of King Alfonso will be positively disastrous in Spain, where he, and he alone, by a display of statesmanship, kingcraft, call it what we may, almost phenomenal in a young man who ascends the throne at 17, kept the balance between rival parties, and made himself universally respected.

He has not long been survived by Serrano, the Duque de la Torre, generally believed to be more nearly related to him than appeared to be the case, a thing in itself by no means improbable, if we remember the circumstances which attended the ill-omened "Spanish marriages," and that Serrano was, at the time, Prime Minister, and, to all intents and purposes, "Maire du Palais."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 20th ult.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, the 18th ult.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN has warmly acknowledged the skill and vigour with which the Burmese expedition has been brought to a successful issue. We learn from the India Office:—

The following telegram from Her Majesty the Queen to the Secretary of State has been repeated to the Viceroy of India for communication to General Prendergast.

"Pray express my warm thanks to General Prendergast, and admiration of the skill with which he has conducted the whole expedition."

In another column we give further particulars of the occupation by our troops of Mandalay, and of Thebaw's embarkation. As will be seen below, he has reached Rangoon in safety.

TELEGRAPHING yesterday, General Prendergast reports:—

"The disarmament of Mandalay is being carried out by the Ministers effectually. People are returning to their homes and avocations. The city is quiet, with the exception of bands of dacoits in the suburbs.

"According to the reports of all officials, political and military, not a murder has been committed since the British force arrived in Mandalay."

It is stated that Thebaw's destination is Rutnagherry. Aden is also mentioned, we hope erroneously. It is not likely that Thebaw would live long in a climate so different from that of Burma. Perhaps it may end in his being sent to Ceylon, there to compare notes with Arabi! Seven of the king's half-sisters have been released from prison, after having suffered six years' captivity. They speak bitterly of the Queen's cruel treatment of them, and express unbounded delight at the arrival of the British.

THE Viceroy has had the great pleasure of winding up his visit to Central India by an act of well-deserved kindness. He has restored to Scindia the Gwalior Fort, which we have, greatly to its owner's disgust, held ever since the Mutiny. The matter is too important to be passed over with a cursory notice; for the present we will only say that the grateful words in which Lord Dufferin announced the restoration, and which we quote below, were calculated to enhance its value. On the 2nd of December a grand Durbar was held at the Palace at Gwalior, when Lord Dufferin delivered a speech, in the course of which he declared, that the Empress of India had decided to restore the Gwalior fortress to the Maharajah, as a signal mark of her confidence and favour, knowing that by doing so she would be gratifying the most ardent wishes of his Highness's heart. The Viceroy continued:—

At the same time Her Majesty hopes that the act will be regarded throughout India, not merely as a personal favour bestowed upon the individual Chief to whom it is accorded, but as an indication that the Empress and the English nation have not failed to appreciate the universal loyalty to the Imperial rule and to the Throne and Person of Her Majesty, recently displayed in so striking a manner by the Princes of the Native States, and by the people of India.

The Maharajah, in reply, expressed his gratitude to the Viceroy for fulfilling the deepest wish of his heart in restoring to him the fortress of his ancestors, and trusted that he might be counted among those most warmly attached to the Empress.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal returned to Calcutta on Saturday, the 5th, after having traversed a great part of the province of Orissa, and carefully inspected the tracts devastated by the cyclone last September. The country appears to be rapidly recovering from the calamity, and the crops are generally promising.

THE Liberal remarks, not without a grain of sense:—

Mr. Grant Duff's tour to Simla and back will cost Rs. 10,000. The time has come, we think, when Governors should travel like private gentleman. Lord Lawrence was a Viceroy who had the courage of his convictions to a striking degree. Whenever going to Simla, he travelled by the ordinary passenger trains, and thus saw more of the discomforts of railway travelling than he could hope to learn by going by special trains.

From Lord Lawrence to Mr. Grant Duff! What a bathos! magnis componere parva—great compared with small—with a vengeance!

THE Times hears (Dec. 1) that the disturbances in Nepal, which led to the death of the Prime Minister, were due to jealousy, at his attempt to associate with himself in the Ministry a son of the late Sir Jung Bahadur. Three persons only seem to have been killed, namely, the Minister, his intended associate, and the latter's son. A new Government has been constituted, with Bir Shumshere Jung as Prime Minister, and General Khudg Shumshere Wung as his assistant. Both the new Ministers have received an English education at Calcutta, and it is believed that the change will have a favourable effect upon the relations of Nepal with the Indian Government.

THE Lahore Civil and Military Gazette sounds, none too soon, a warning note:—

The arrival (it rightly says) at Merv of a deputation from Maimena, praying for Russian protection against Afghan misgovernment, may possibly raise, sooner than is convenient, a question not provided for in the Anglo-Russian agreement. Sooner or later, the Russians will insist on the theory that, if England claims a monopoly of interference in Afghanistan, that monopoly has its duties as well as its profits. If England, they will argue, wants no one to interfere in Afghanistan but herself, she is responsible that the Ameer's subjects are properly governed, and that they refrain from attacks on their neighbours. The first part of this twofold responsibility is now brought to notice; and the deputation to Merv suggests endless trouble in the future. It would not be difficult to prove that the Usbeg subjects of the Ameer in Afghan-Turkestan are generally oppressed by his governors and deputies; and in many respects, the state of things across the Hindu Kush is very similar to what prevailed in the Balkhan provinces previous to the war between Russia and Turkey. Russia will endeavour to follow the same course that she followed then. Maimena corresponds to Bulgaria; Badakshan, Saignan and Wakkan to Herzegovina and Montenegro; Balk to Serbia; Cabul to Constantinople; Bokhara to Roumania. The same intrigues, the same agitations, the same encouragement to popular leaders—we shall have the whole story over again; and the only doubt is whether England will play this time a better game.

It is stated, says the Madras Times, that Lord Dufferin intends to visit Hyderabad, the Nizam's capital, in February next, and that the visit may possibly result in some administrative changes.

THE assay value of coins and bullion received in the Indian mints in the first six months of the current financial year was Rs. 6,00,16,130, and of that coined and examined Rs. 61,11,22,014. Of the latter the Calcutta Mint did Rs. 2,21,79,192, and the Bombay Mint Rs. 3,89,42,822.

A new hill station. Allahabad's new hill station, which it is proposed to convert into a summer station for European troops, is called Naro, and is situated four miles off the road to Rewa. The plain on which the hill stands is about 1,000 feet above sea level, and the hill rises 800 or 900 feet more, the highest point being 1,960 feet above the sea. The water supply is deficient. The mean temperature appears to be only about 3 degrees lower than that of Allahabad on the average of the year, but it is from 6 to 7½ degrees cooler in the hot months.

"For some months latterly," says the Madras Mail, "the actors of the Victoria Opera Company (Parsees) had been the favourites of King Thebaw, his Queens, and his Court. They twice visited Mandalay and performed there many of their Hindustani plays. Thebaw did not understand the language of the plays, but he had translations of them specially made for him. He defrayed all the travelling expenses of the company, and paid them large sums of money besides. Sometimes he displayed his munificence to the actors in eccentric ways. It is said that on one occasion he caused to be arranged on a table before him as many imitation cocoanuts made of silver as there were actors, each cocoanut containing precious stones, pearls, and rings of more or less value. Each actor was then left free to try his luck. As each was by turns called up before the King, he was allowed to pick up one of the cocoanuts placed on the table.

REUTER hears from Samarcand, under date the 3rd inst., that a Russian Embassy will leave here on the 5th inst. for Bokhara, charged to congratulate the new Ameer on his accession to the throne. The Embassy consists of General Jaffimovitch, a captain of the General Staff, and a diplomatic official. If there be any truth in the oft-repeated rumour that the Tsar has the intention to be crowned at Samarcand, in the course of the summer, as Emperor of Central Asia, the subject will doubtless be broached at the approaching interview.

WE are glad to see that the colonelcy of the Royal Horse Guards, which carries with it the position of Gold Stick, and the somewhat onerous duties thereto appertaining, has been conferred on an Indian officer, Sir Patrick Grant. A service contemporary states that the position had previously been offered, as we suggested should be the case, to another distinguished Indian Field-Marshal, Lord Napier of Magdala.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—On Wednesday last an increased amount of 35 lacs was offered for tender, and were all placed in Bills. Twenty lacs were allotted at 1s. 6½d. per rupee, and the remainder at 1s. 6d. ¾d. per rupee, the applications at this latter price having reached about 50 lacs. Compared with the previous allotment, the prices realised show an improvement of ¾d. per rupee. Refined silver has been steady during the week at 47½d. per oz., rather a high price for India unless for future delivery; but the market has received support from inquiries for the Continent, and also for the English Mint. The amounts disposed of and rates obtained at the week's official allotment of India Council remittances were as follows:—

	Rs.	Average.	Minimum.
Calcutta ...	20,14,000	1/6-249	1/6 7-32 29 per cent.
Bombay ...	14,51,000	1/6-218	1/6 7-32 29 per cent.
Madras ...	20,000	1/6-218	1/6 7-32 29 per cent.

Next week 35 lacs will again be offered for tender. From April 1 to December 1 inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.6,38,40,359, realising £4,931,772. To the corresponding date last year, Rs.9,38,02,918, realising £7,655,034, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

TRULY the Radicals have effectually "gulled" the poor yokels! Three acres and a cow! Taken literally too! A correspondent at Nuneaton telegraphs:—An amusing incident has just occurred at one of the elections in the Midlands. Two rustics who went to vote for the Liberal candidate took halters with them, each expecting to bring back a cow. Before quitting the polling-place they asked the presiding officer whether they could make a selection from the animals in a field close by; but he confessed his inability to advise them in the matter.

THERE was an agricultural labourer in the district, who was met by his master and instructed how to vote. Shortly afterwards he was met by an election agent, who said, "How are you going to vote?" "Oh," said the man, "I am going to vote as master votes." Well, another agricultural labourer was met by the same agent, and, in answer to questions, said he was going to vote as his master did. But subsequently these two labourers met, and one said, "Well, Jim, how are you going to vote?" The reply was, "I am going to vote as master votes;" but he slily added, "master's going to vote as he pleases, and I mean to vote as I please."

"Is your husband a Liberal or a Conservative?" asked a lady canvasser the other day of the wife of a voter in a new constituency. "He ain't neither the one nor the other, ma'am." "But surely he must be either the one or the other?" "No he ain't, he's a labourer."

THE Indian Medical Gazette advocates the use of condemned criminals for cholera experiments. It shows that from 300 to 400 persons are hanged annually in India, and thinks these might be spared the "final execution should they survive the doctor's doses." The criminals are said to have expressed a preference for the rope.

THE museum of St. Petersburg has a bank note probably the oldest in existence. It is of the Imperial Bank of China, issued by the Chinese Government, and dates from the year 1399 before Christ.

LORD COLERIDGE told us, the other day, that one of the most eminent men in America, whom he was proud to term his friend, was supposed to be in the habit of indulging in tedious speeches and of expressing himself in long sentences. When on one occasion this charge was playfully insinuated, Mr. Evans retorted by saying, "I thought there was only one class of people who objected to long sentences, and that was the criminal class."

WE recollect once meeting a man who declared that he did not know the difference between "God Save the Queen" and "Jem Crow." This is almost equalled by what we read the other day. "I remember," says an officer, who had been a good deal in Egypt, "once serving under a colonel who was hopelessly unmusical, and rather proud of it than otherwise. He used to say, 'I know only two tunes; one is "God Save the Queen," and the other isn't.'"

THE Vigilance League of Madras has collapsed—neither Muslims nor Hindus are willing to become sedition-mongers. This is as it should be.

PEOPLE are beginning to discuss whether matters would be better or worse were France to lay hands on India or were the destinies of that Empire entrusted to the holy keeping of the Czar with the "knout" and "political prisons." To such a pass have matters come in this nineteenth century. O for a Clive, a Warren Hastings, or, well—even a "patriot!"

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

IN SOUTHERN INDIA.*

"I have always understood," said a high functionary in India, "that missions are an acknowledged failure." Let us take a glance at Mrs. Murray Mitchell's account of her visit to some of the chief stations in the Madras Presidency, and see how far the facts of the case are in harmony with the popular notions on the subject. First of all, as regards the capital itself, what is the story which it proclaims? In 1843 Mr. Braidwood gathered together a few good caste girls, and imparted to them the elements of education. A quarter of a century elapsed, and now there are schools in every direction, while no less than 1,800 females are under Christian instruction. Then there are the "Chetry" schools for the better classes, the ragged schools for waifs and orphans, the normal schools where teachers are taught that they may teach others. Nor have the Free Church been less zealous in their efforts than our own Established Church, while the "European Orphan Asylum" is a testimony to the fact that charity in its noblest form is not wanting from the philanthropy of the Madrassees.

Turning to Madras, further south, Mrs. Mitchell tells us of Miss Rendall's boarding school for the daughters of Native Christians, irrespective of caste or class. She refers also to the "zenana" work of Mrs. Capron, who has no less than 500 women learning to read, to say nothing of her day schools and dispensaries, over all of which she exercises a personal superintendence. Nor would it be fair to omit mention of Mr. Rendall, who, till his death, used to wander through the neighbouring villages and towns, preaching and holding religious services. What may be the results is not for man to say, but at least it is evident that there is no lack of energy, nor to outward appearances is there reason to suppose that the effects are less satisfactory than in other countries.

Take yet another instance. Tinnevely, with a population of about 2,000,000, can boast of 100,000 Protestant Christians. Well may Mrs. Mitchell exclaim, in tones of justifiable pride, "Let all who talk of missions as a failure be told of this weighty fact." Take, again, Travancore, with 250 places of worship and 50,000 converts, or Colar, a short distance from Bangalore, where Miss Anstey has established a "Faith Mission," which in August last numbered within its charitable walls upwards of 350 poor desolate orphans. To multiply examples would be easy but endless, to draw conclusions is more difficult; but it must with fairness be conceded that there is no lack of enterprise on the part of missionary labourers. They have toiled, they have worked, they have sown; let us hope they will reap the harvest. In regard to Mrs. Mitchell's work but few words are needed. She has had much to tell, and she has told it simply, plainly, and without fictitious colouring. There is no pretence of fine writing or ostentatious display; no exaggeration of language or straining at effect. Throughout the work there is an air of unaffected simplicity and unpretentious earnestness. She believes that she is charged with a mission of piety and zeal; she aspires not beyond. She seeks no reward but that of a clear conscience, and lastly, but by no means least, she at every turn pays a silent tribute of homage to him who was, as he should be, her "guide, counsellor, and friend—her husband," a trait which lends an additional charm to her work, which, being readable and interesting, will, it is hoped, be read.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

Colonel Malleson opens the ball in the Army and Navy Magazine, continuing his narrative of the campaigns of Prince Eugene of Savoy, of whom a characteristic portrait appears in this month's Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (p. 379), to the capture of Lille in 1808. A new correspondent, Ignotus, gives, in very chatty style, interspersed with anecdotes, the first instalment of an account of his experiences on service in Egypt, of which we can only say, that, if the sequel be on a par with the commencement, no one will regret spending the few minutes required each month for its perusal. "Our Captain's Yarns" are, as usual, entertaining, and continue to give a vivid picture of naval life some half-century ago. We cannot help regretting that a full biography of a man so enterprising, and so persevering, Colonel Lambton, the founder, too, of the Indian Survey, which has produced so many distinguished men, has not, long ere this, been written; the brief account of his services, by "H.M.C.," continued in this number, is the more welcome, and we shall rejoice should its publication lead to the production of a full memorial of his life and work. Surely it would not be impossible to recover, even now, his papers, which Mr. Morton, his executor, refused to deliver to Sir George Everett, Lambton's successor in office.

Considerable alterations and improvements are announced for the ensuing volume, which will include papers on changes in the Army and the present condition of both Services, "the later records of H.M.'s Regiments," and others, which can hardly fail to give the Magazine a yet wider popularity.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.†

It would be absurd to expect any Review, at the present time, not to contain much reference to the political crisis now almost at an end; and here we find not a few political papers, all on the right side, in adequate number, and mostly of high merit. Mr. Raikes exposes in a most trenchant manner the fallacies and mischievous tendency of "the Radical programme." Mr. Leigh Pemberton demolishes, not by dynamite, but by steadily undermining it, the castle (in the air) which Messrs. Chamberlain and Co. have built on the alleged iniquity of land tenures. Their syllogism—if we may dignify such a crudity with such a name—is: People who are rich usually possess land; people who are poor possess none; therefore, if we give you poor folks land, you will be rich; and this is what we mean to do. To state this nakedly is to refute it. A story goes, that William IV., when Post Captain, met a worthy tar, who was imbued with Socialist doctrines as regards property in general. "Why, my man," said the Duke of Clarence, "you would soon spend your share were everything divided." "In course I should," answered our dialectician. "Well, what would you do then?" "Divide again," was the ready reply. We fear the three acres and a cow would soon dwindle in the hands of many a new "landed proprietor" into half an acre and half a shin of cow-beef, if even he kept anything.

The electoral triumph has, alas! sung his paean prematurely, but may be pardoned in consideration of one of the most scathing indictments against Gladstonian "policy" at home and abroad which we have ever read.

Mr. Buckland's description of the opium manufacture in India, written in his usual pleasant style, is much the reverse of soporific, and will well repay perusal. He rightly points out the fallacies into which many well meaning men fall on this subject. We will quote but one passage:—

"India now possesses the rare fortune of obtaining from one of her native products a great revenue without the imposition of taxes on her own people; and we are asked to sacrifice the vital interests of these people, to whose good we are pledged by the highest sense of duty, in the hope of protecting others, against their will, from doubtful evils; in other words, to inflict certain injury where we have the power, in pursuit of a benevolent chimera which must elude us. Truly, to use the words of Condorcet, L'enthousiasme ignorant est la plus terrible des bêtes féroces."

The banner of attack on the Church has been so prominently flaunted, that it is satisfactory to see how vigorously the assault has been repelled. The fallacies on which the allegations against the Church rest, and the self-seeking which underlies them, are well exposed in two essays by Austen Pember and John Reynolds, who, while fully alive to the danger with which the Establishment is threatened, demonstrate the utter baselessness of the arguments directed against it.

The number is throughout most instructive as well as interesting, and worthily winds up an unusually good year's issue of the Review.

VEDACHRESTOMATHIE.*

The Vedachrestomathie of Professor Hillebrandt is a book that has long been wanted for the use of Sanskrit students. It contains a selection of passages illustrating the language, the grammar, and the ideas of the Vedic age of Sanskrit literature, which must ever remain the most interesting and valuable of the relics preserved in India. Professor Hillebrandt has chosen thirty-nine hymns from the Rig-veda, eighteen hymns from the Atharva-veda, three passages from the Satapatha-brāhmana, three pieces from the Aitareya-brāhmana, and one section of the Chhândogya-Upanishad. This selection is thoroughly judicious, for the works chosen may fairly be considered representative of the age which the Professor desires to illustrate. He has also taken care to include several of the most instructive passages in the books from which he has quoted. From the Rig-veda he has taken hymns addressed to all the more important deities, such as Agni, Indra, the Maruts, Visvadevas, the Sun, the Wind, the Waters, the sacred Soma, &c. He has also given some quasi-historical hymns, including the curious description of the horse-sacrifice (R.V. i. 162), and the poem on the frogs (R.V. vii. 103), which satirizes the Brahmanic ceremonial, comparing the various priests to frogs of different colours, hopping about and croaking out ridiculous noises. The remarkable hymn on the sacrifice of the horse is so precise in its description of what was done on such occasions that we are driven to conclude, not only that horses were actually immolated, but that the worshippers used to eat the roasted victim. The rugged simplicity of those ancient poems stands out in remarkable contrast to the rest of the literature of the Hindus.

The first selection from the Brāhmanas gives the remarkable tradition of the gradual advance of the Aryans from the banks of the Sarasvatī to the Sadānirā. It describes how the sacrificial fire (i.e. the Brahmanic ceremonial) was first generated, and then spread onwards to the east. The first line is generally considered to mean, "Māthava the Videgha bore Agni Vaisvānara in his mouth"—treating several of the words as proper names; but we should prefer, "The fire of friction carried in itself the fire beneficial to all men;" that is to say, the beneficial fire, or fire of sacrifice, was derived from the fire produced by friction. The word māthava is derived from mathu, "friction," and vi-degh-a (in modern Sanskrit vi-deh-a) may not improbably be connected with the word diggha, "fire," from the root dah, "to burn," or driksh, "to kindle;" for the legend says that the fire, when produced, "traversed the earth, burning (dah-ant) towards the east," using the very root dah here spoken of. Should this suggestion be confirmed, much additional interest would centre in this tradition.

The next selection from this Brāhmana is also of singular interest, for it relates the story of the preservation of Manu from a universal deluge. A little fish claimed the protection of Manu, and in return warned him that in a few years a flood would come which was to sweep away all creatures. He directed Manu to make a ship to preserve himself. When the flood came Manu entered his ship, and fastened it to the fish's horn, and the grateful creature towed him safely over the Himalaya mountains, down the southern side of which he descended, and proceeded to people the land. This is obviously the Hindu version of the cataclysm, which is found also among Jewish, Babylonian, and Chinese traditions, and is of considerable value to the student of comparative mythology.

Of quite a different character is the matter chosen from the Aitareya-Brāhmana. This presents the student with the absurd outgrowth of priestcraft and superstition; and is useful to him by showing the fanciful notions imparted to simple natural facts by the very ancient Brahmins of India. The Dikshaniyā ceremony described in the selection before us is simply a caricature of the spiritual change which a man undergoes on his first admission to sacrificial rites, a change naturally spoken of as a "new birth" or "regeneration." This simple idea is reduced to a material pantomime, described in language of the most puerile and absurd character.

"Vedachrestomathie. Für den ersten Gebrauch bei Vedavorlesungen herausgegeben und mit einem Glossar versehen." Von Dr. Phil. Alfred Hillebrandt. Berlin: Weidmannsche Buchhandlung. 1885.

* "Army and Navy Magazine," December, 1885. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

† "The National Review," December, 1885. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

It is evident from the foregoing that Professor Hillebrandt's book is well suited to the purpose for which it is offered, viz., to supply students with selections from Vedic literature sufficiently varied to give them a fair idea of its general scope and character. A Glossary at the end gives the meanings of the words occurring in the texts, and also, in many cases, the authorities on which special interpretations rest.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.*

The paper in this excellent number which will at once fix the attraction of the Anglo-Indian reader is that on "Burma and the Burmese," by Dr. Wm. Alexander, of the Army Medical Staff. It is a most interesting and pleasantly-written article, and the illustrations with which it is interspersed bring the subject matter vividly before the reader. The brilliant feat of the late Admiral Bythessa, for which he was awarded the Victoria Cross, in having, with Stoker William Johnstone, waylaid a Russian escort in charge of despatches, capturing these, and taking three of the escort prisoners, forms this month's portion of the national record of the Victoria Cross. The piece de résistance will, to the Service reader, be an exhaustive and profusely illustrated account of the German army, evidently derived from authoritative German sources. The "Parliamentary Generals of the Great Civil War" is well continued down to the first prominent appearance of Cromwell at the battle of Horncastle, and the number closes with a suggestive article by the Editor on "Volunteers as a Means of Defence."

ERRATA.—In the review of "Claims of Ishmael," in our last issue, page 893, read:—In title page "London: W. H. SURRENDER OF MANDALAY.

THE Correspondents of the various journals telegraph, at considerable length, the particulars of this event, the probability of which we announced in our last issue. We have space for little more than the official reports:—

"From General Prendergast, Ava, 1st December, 1885.

"King's war-boat, bearing a flag of truce and containing the Minister of the Interior, met us on 26th. He was empowered to make terms, and begged for an armistice. I replied that I was not empowered to grant an armistice, but that if the King would surrender himself, his army, and Mandalay, and if the Europeans at Mandalay were unharmed, I would save the King's life. I gave till 4 a.m. 27th for reply.

"Advanced at 6 a.m. 27th. When in sight of Ava, the Envoy returned with orders from King that Burmans were not to fire on fleet, and that the King would accede to all my demands."

From Chief Commissioner, Rangoon, Dec. 2:—

"Correspondent telegraphs:—

"Mandalay occupied unopposed 28th; Europeans uninjured except captain Flotilla steamer Okpho; captured crew cruelly used, starved.

"Populace Mandalay reported very pleased at occupation; perfectly unconcerned at removal of King."

LATER.

From Chief Commissioner, British Burmah—dated Dec. 2:—

"King Thebaw arrived in British territory."

Copy of telegram from General Prendergast, Mandalay, dated Thayetmyo, December 2 (received 5.43 p.m.).

"No communication being received from the palace, I landed the troops at 1 p.m., and surrounded the city and palace. The First Minister, Kinwoon-Mengyee, met me on the way and asked for Colonel Sladen to go to palace at once to quiet anticipated panic.

"At 5 p.m. the Minister came to me with Colonel Sladen and tendered submission of the King. I placed guard on palace and arranged to come up on following day to receive the King's formal submission.

"On 29th I had an interview with the King and Queen in the palace. The troops formed on each side of the road while I led the Royal family through the throne room to the east or royal gate of the palace.

"They then entered carriages and were conveyed under escort of a brigade to the Thooresh steamer, in which they will proceed to Rangoon under escort of two companies Liverpool Regiment.

"Five regiments and a battery are on duty in the city to-night to keep order. The Italians, Camotto and Molinari, will also be delivered.

"No ill-feeling to the British has been shown by the Burmans, but they threaten to plunder one another; hence the large force in the city.

"The four Woon-Mengyees were present at the palace during my interview with Thebaw and the exodus of the Royal family from the palace. They all remain in office.

"The King is accompanied by the two Queens and some of the ladies of the Court."

CALCUTTA, Dec. 2.

It is stated that the Viceroy will visit Burmah shortly to arrange the details of the Government.

The abbreviated account of an interview which Colonel Sladen, accompanied by the Times correspondent, had with the King, may be worth perusal. The Queen prompted her husband throughout.

"Thebaw," says the correspondent, "is a stout, young, good-looking man of about thirty, with a weak face. He has not the receding forehead which has always been the distinctive mark of the descendants of Aloungpra. Since he found that he had no violence to fear, King Thebaw has recovered his nerve, and he displayed a good deal of quiet dignity."

This morning Tinedah Mengyee gave information that Thebaw might attempt to escape. The King was arrested in consequence, and removed to the pavilion where I saw him.

Colonel Sladen told the King that I was the correspondent of the Times. The King immediately said that he knew the Times, and that a copy of it was taken by his Ministers to learn English public opinion. He then added that he was anxious the English people should hear his words, and he requested me to write down what he said. At the close of the interview I read over my notes, through the interpreter, to Thebaw, who said that they were correct.

Thebaw said:—

"I wish to be kept quiet. I have given over everything to the English. I want Sladen to govern the country now and in the future. If Sladen had remained as Resident and not left, this war would never have occurred. I have been badly advised.

"I was seized when young, and made a mere puppet. I have now to suffer for what Tinedah and others forced me to do. I now know that I was altogether wrong.

"My Ministers told me that only five vessels with 2,000 soldiers were coming to make a treaty. My mother-in-law was always very anxious to prevent war. My Ministers are very ungrateful. Not one of them has waited on me since the English arrived in Mandalay."

Soopyalat, turning to the interpreter, said, "Tell him that the day before yesterday I had 300 maids of honour. Yesterday evening only sixteen remained with me. We have two children alive, and three are buried in the northern garden."

Thebaw, resuming, said, "Let Sladen govern the country for five years." The King added:—

"When he has got affairs in good order then I will come back and be guided by him. I have known Sladen since I was a boy, and have most confidence in him, or in any Englishman.

"You English think that I killed all my relations, but it is not so. I was under a guard myself, and they were murdered. The reason that I was not murdered myself was that before the King died he told the Queen I was the quiet son. A horoscope was also drawn by the priests, and my name came out first. For the first seven months after I became King I was not allowed to interfere. I was not even crowned. I continued to wear the Phoongyee priest's robes. I ordered that my relations should not be killed, but imprisoned, so that there might not be a disturbance in the country. I was sleeping in bed when the order to kill them was given by the Ministers.

"After eight months the Yenout Mengyee, who killed the Princes, tried to murder me. The English people knew much that I did, but not of what was going on behind me. I never left the palace.

"I wish the English to know that I am not a drunkard. I am a religious Buddhist. I have given up all the Crown jewels, and I am sure the English, who are a great people, will not object to me, as a King, keeping my ring" (showing me a magnificent ruby ring he was wearing) "or to my wife keeping her jewels" (pointing to a diamond necklace on the Queen).

Colonel Sladen answered,—

"I am certain that the English people would not wish you to be deprived of those jewels."

Thebaw then asked me to return when General Prendergast visited him, as he would like the English people to know what passed.

At 2 o'clock p.m. to-day General Prendergast, accompanied by Admiral Richards and some 80 officers and civilians, proceeded to the pavilion.

Thebaw seemed disconcerted by the presence of the large crowd, who remained covered. The Burmese Ministers, however, who accompanied General Prendergast, by his order prostrated themselves before the King.

After a few words, Thebaw said, "Prendergast, cannot you allow me to remain in the palace until to-morrow?"

General Prendergast replied, "I am afraid not. I can only allow you ten minutes."

Thebaw expressed alarm that there would be fighting between the Burmese and the English on the river during his voyage to Rangoon, and was assured that a military escort would be provided.

* "The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine" for December, 1885. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

The King was then conveyed under a strong guard from the palace through the town, and placed on board the Thooerah, which at once left.

Thebaw was accompanied by the Kinwoon Mengyee. His departure was witnessed by a large crowd, which showed a good deal of feeling.

It will be remembered that, not long since, many land-holders in Bengal petitioned the Lieutenant-Governor to defer the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act until after the first of November, its introduction at an earlier date being calculated to introduce confusion into the agricultural accounts, and that their request was somewhat curtly refused. It is satisfactory to see, from the Bengal Times, that better counsels have prevailed, and that the inconveniences incident to the introduction of a new law will be lessened to the utmost. Our Dacca contemporary says:—

A "Statement of Objects and Reasons" for the short Bill postponing for a limited time the operation of certain provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, explains that the Government of India has approved of the Tenancy Act coming into force on the 1st of November. With reference to the provision of section 190 of the Act, that an interval of at least a month must elapse between the date on which the Act comes into force and that on which rules made under it can be brought into force, there is no reason to believe, we read, that any practical inconvenience will result, except, possibly, as regards the matters of deposits of rent by tenants and distraint; but it is apprehended that inconvenience might be felt in regard to these matters if the provisions of the Act relating to them were for any time in force without the rules by which it is intended that they should be supplemented, and the Lieutenant-Governor has suggested, as the simplest mode of obtaining this, that the date on which the provisions of the Act relating to deposits and distraint are to come into force should be postponed for a month or two, and that the existing law relating to these subjects should meantime be retained in force. The Governor-General in Council, being anxious to minimise any inconvenience incidental to a transition from an old law to a new, has approved of this proposal, and the present Bill has been prepared to give effect to it.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE FALL OF THEBAW AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

THE termination of the Burmese campaign without further loss of life, and with so little bloodshed, is a most gratifying circumstance, and we cannot be surprised that Her Majesty, in a telegram which heads our "Notes of the Week," has emphatically expressed Her approval of what has been done.

It is, moreover, most satisfactory to learn that the brilliancy of the success has not, as alleged by the correspondent of a contemporary, been dimmed by riot and murder taking place at Mandalay since our occupation of the city. On this point General Prendergast's testimony, already quoted, is conclusive.

Nor is it in England alone that the preparations for the expedition, so unostentatiously and thoroughly made, and the all but bloodless success of the campaign, have received a due meed of admiration. We can hardly wonder that a French journal of importance, the (Royalist) Français, should observe in its yesterday's issue:—

It is impossible for us not to make a melancholy comparison between our mortification in Tonquin, and this well-planned and vigorously executed expedition, with its promising future. The highway to China is opened to English trade, and the English have taken care that it shall not be closed behind them at Rangoon, or beyond in the Indian Ocean, or in the Red Sea.

No doubt a similar opinion will be expressed in that country of successful, though rarely bloodless, expeditions—Germany.

The question now naturally arises, what course are we to take as regards the country now lying at our feet? We have reason to believe that no definite decision has been arrived at on this head. The Chambers of Commerce, and the mercantile classes generally, are known to be strongly in favour of immediate annexation, a course which, they contend, will be advantageous to British commerce, agreeable to the population—weary of extortion, barbarous punishments, and arbitrary rule; one which, moreover, has the advantage of leaving nothing open to future chance. Nor is it possible to deny the weight of these arguments, any more than we can refuse to recognise the influential character of the bodies by whom they are urged. "Public opinion," we read, "is strongly in favour of annexation. All are agreed that the country must be brought into order by the British, and much time will be required for this work."

On the other hand, Mr. Bernard, the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, who has been deputed with, it would seem, extensive powers, to Mandalay, "to administer the country provisionally in the name of the Queen-Empress," is of a different opinion. Mr. Bernard opposes the policy of annexation, and favours that of a Protectorate, during the minority of the son of the deceased Nyoungyan Prince. It is, indeed, asserted by "a writer acquainted with Mandalay, that if any member of the Royal family be put on the throne, his right will certainly be disputed, and disastrous intrigues will follow;" but on a matter of fact like this Mr. Bernard's opinion may fairly be accepted. Whoever is allowed to succeed to the throne under a Protectorate will, we may be assured, reign rather than govern.

It is not likely that any definite decision on this important point will be arrived at until after Lord Dufferin's proposed visit to Burma, where he will be able, as is his wont, to form an unbiassed opinion, after conference with the highest officials, and the most intelligent representatives of mercantile and other interests.

Clear it is, that the final decision will be taken at home, and it is most desirable that the wishes of China should be taken into consideration. There can be no reason to doubt that China, already conterminous with Russia, and nearly so with France, would not unwillingly have the British as neighbours; a view which, we gather, is held by no less an authority on the point than Mr. Colquhoun. China will not, probably, much care whether we locate a puppet King or a Chief Commissioner (or Lieutenant-governor) at Mandalay. This may (or may not) be matter of indifference to her. But the time is not distant when she will insist on playing her natural part in the affairs of Further Asia. She has as much reason to fear Russia, and to regard it as her hereditary enemy, as we have. She has had the same experience as ourselves of the duplicity and shiftiness of Russian diplomacy, which, however, she has met à l'Orientale, by encountering it with its own weapons, and has, therefore, not been so signally worsted as we have been. We shall, if we play our cards but tolerably well, find in China an ideal ally in the impending struggle with Russia. For the first time we are now about to be brought into immediate territorial contact with the Western Provinces of her Empire, and we submit that no better opportunity could be desired by any moderately far-sighted politician to make overtures for a nearer approximation than is implied by ordinary diplomatic relations, between the Governments of two nations whose interests, nowhere antagonistic, are now likely to be more than ever identical.

A "MUHUMMADAN MAGAZINE."

WE have been much pleased to receive, however tardily, a copy of the first number of the Muhummadan Magazine. However much we may ignore the fact, fact it remains, that Muhummadans do "hang together" far more than the average Anglo-Indian may be disposed to admit. Though local Muhummadan Native journals are by no means wanting, we think that this is the first serious attempt to concentrate—to draw, as it were, into a focus—Mussulman opinions from all parts of India. And, as such, we cannot but cordially welcome it. Mere panegyric on things as they are we do not expect nor desire. With a rigid creed, entering so much into the details of daily life as that of Islam, there must be friction, and even great friction, ere its believers can wholly accommodate themselves to circumstances so utterly divergent from those contemplated by the Prophet as those now existing in India. We must regard instances of this friction as mere growing-pains, destined to cease when the body politic shall have arrived at maturity.

The objects of the magazine are set forth in an excellent Introduction by Meer Shujaet Ali Khan, who may be assumed to be its leading spirit. They are, in brief, to stir up (so far, that is, as Mussulman matters are concerned) and stimulate, public thought, the magazine identifying itself with no sect or school. It desires less to express opinions, than to be the medium of communicating them to the public, seeking "to present to the people such questions of importance relating to the national life, religious and social specially, as should keep the public mind engaged," freely opening its pages "to all shades of opinion on these questions. . . . The magazine will, in short, aim at providing the means of studying questions relating to Mussulman religion and Mussulman society in different aspects, and at constituting itself into an impartial medium of a free ventilation of public thought concerning those questions."

It is satisfactory to be able to say that the performance does not "lag behind" the intention. The tone is unexceptional, throughout moderate, and tolerant towards both Europeans and Hindus. As regards the former, it is refreshing to miss the "Let us break their bonds asunder, and cast away their cords from us" style, which too often disfigures the productions of young India, while, as regards the latter, it is suggestive that the first Mussulman magazine should be published in the holy city of the Hindus, Kashi, Benares. Besides the thoughtful Introduction, Mr. Miller's paper on "Muhummadans and English Education," and the translated letter of a Mussulman lady on "Liberty to Women" are the chief items in the first number of a magazine, the appearance of which is an event in itself, and for which we hope we may augur long life and prosperity.

At a Durbar, held some time since by the Maharajah Holkar, his Highness explained to the zemindars, putwaris and farmers assembled on the occasion, the principles of the revised system of land revenue about to come into effect in his dominions. His speech was plain, outspoken and practical. He said that he had not yet got a territorial reward for his services to the British Government during the Mutiny. Such a reward would compensate the losses sustained by him on that eventful occasion. Much, however, as he valued this reward, he attached still more weight and importance to the exertions made by his own subjects in the improvement and cultivation of the land. "When I ascended the musnud," he said, "our territory was worth fourteen lacs of rupees a year, while its present revenue amounts to about seventy-five lacs per annum, including Khasgi revenue, and I have every hope that it may rise soon to one crore of rupees through your exertions and a further extension of irrigation works in the State. The revenue that has been collected in the Treasury is held in trust for you and belongs to you. May God forbid that any calamity should befall us. But if it should happen, the money will be spent for your protection. I value you more than I do my officers." The passage here quoted embodies both wisdom and common sense.

GENERAL SIR WM. M. COGHLAN, K.C.B.

Sir Wm. Coghlan, the notice of whose decease appeared in our last issue, deserves something more than a mere obituary announcement. He was, as the late Sir John Kaye well observed in his "Sepoy War," a "soldier-statesman," of the type in which our Indian services have been so fruitful, possessing abilities less showy than solid, and actuated by no other motive than to render them available for the service of his country. Kaye has shown of how great value was his energy while Governor of Aden—a post he held for many years—during the Indian Mutiny; and his counsel and foresight greatly conduced to the successful result of the Abyssinian war. Not the least of his merits was his anticipating, on the impulse of the moment, the intention, of which he had but an instant previously (and, it is said, at dinner) received notice, of the French to take possession of the Island of Perim, which faces Aden, and would, in hostile hands, to a great extent neutralise the advantages which its possession confers on us. Sir William Coghlan's "record," to use the word in the professional sense, was more than usually varied, as he had been a member of both services. The obituary notice in the Times says:—"General Sir W. M. Coghlan, K.C.B., Royal Artillery, was the son of the late Captain J. Coghlan, C.B., R.N., and served for some years in the Royal Navy on the North American Station. He joined the Royal Artillery in India in 1820, and served with the Kolapore Field Force in 1826-7. He was Brigade-Major of Artillery in Scinde and Afghanistan in 1838-40, and was present at the capture of Shugnee, the occupation of Cabul and Candahar, and at the assault and capture of Kelat. He was Political Resident and Commandant at Aden from 1854 to 1863, and commanded a column of troops against the Arabs in 1858, carrying the fort of Sheikh Othmar by storm. General Coghlan, who was a J.P. for the county of Kent and the Cinque Ports, was created a K.C.B. in 1864. He married in 1832, Mary Jane, only daughter of the late Captain J. Marshal, R.N., who survives him."

MR. W. T. HOOPER.

The name of Mr. W. T. Hooper, of the East India House, who died, at the age of eighty, the other day, will be remembered by every Civil Servant—few, alas! remain—who passed through the East India Company's College at Haileybury, of which he acted as clerk. His genial courtesy, and readiness to hold to the spirit, rather than to the letter, of the rules which it devolved on him to carry out, were the theme of general commendation among those with whom he had to deal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 27th Nov.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 25th Nov.

OUR latest intelligence is derived from the Times, whose Correspondent has, however, been relegated to Rangoon, by order of General Prendergast. Much astonishment has been caused during the past week by the appointment of the "bloodstained ruffian," Tynedah Mengyee, as the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce calls him, to a position of power in the new Government of Upper Burma.

It has long been notorious (says the Chamber) that, although a Minister of the Burmese Crown, he (Tynedah) has not scrupled to share the gains of the Dacoits. After the receipt of the ultimatum he did his best to bring about a general massacre of the Europeans still in the country. The ex-King's own misdeeds have been very heavy, and he has richly merited his deposition. But the misdeeds of the Tynedah are heavier still, and he is even more unfit to be associated in a civilised Government than Thebaw was to be King. The Chamber earnestly begs that such a scandal as the employment of this bloodstained ruffian by Her Majesty's Government may be put an end to without delay.

THE authorities seem to have acted on the principle "set a thief to catch a thief," for this is the, to our mind very lame, official explanation:—

It is semi-officially stated at Mandalay that the reason for employing the Tynedah is his great personal influence with the Dacoits and other bad characters. The results anticipated have not, however, yet followed. A considerable force of Dacoits is assembled at Monthobo, which is eighty miles north of Mandalay and is the birthplace of Maungpra.

It is, however, satisfactory to think that, while inter arma silent leges, rational arrangements of a permanent character will be made by Mr. Bernard, who was at Minhla on Friday, the 11th inst., and is now, probably, in Mandalay. The time has now, we hope, arrived for arms, in their turn, to be silent, and to give way to regular administration. The Viceroy's recent utterances at Lucknow leave his own opinion on the subject of annexation at least doubtful.

WE are, it seems, to have (with the full consent, we are glad to observe, of all persons interested) a kind of Charity Commission in Bengal:—

The Bengal Government, at the instance of the National Mahomedan Association, has appointed a committee to inquire into the Mahomedan educational endowments in the province. The Committee is directed to ascertain, as far as possible, the intentions of the founder of each endowment, and whether the funds set apart for education are being properly administered.

AND we have a novelty in the form of a "Native Congress" of delegates to discuss matters which they deem of national importance. The principal of these are, first, the reconstitution of the Legislative Councils; second, the Native Volunteer movement; third, the increase in military expenditure; fourth, the Civil Service; fifth, the separation of judicial from executive authority in the administration of criminal justice; sixth, the reconstitution of the police force. It may be freely admitted that all these subjects, and especially the first of them, deserve most careful consideration. If too much "tall talk" be avoided, and attention paid to what is practical, rather than to what may fit in with individual crotchets, we see no reason to augur aught but good from such a meeting.

It was to be expected that no time would be lost in recognising the brilliant service performed by General

Prendergast; he has well earned his K.C.B. The Gazette of December 5th tells us:—

The Queen has been pleased to give orders for the following promotion in the Most Honourable Order of the Bath:—To be an Extra Member of the Military Division of the Second Class, or Knight Commanders of the said Most Honourable Order, viz., Major-General Harry North Dalrymple Prendergast, C.B., V.O.

THE appointments, of Sir H. Macpherson as Commander-in-Chief at Madras, and of Sir C. G. Arbuthnot as Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, give Sir F. Roberts two experienced coadjutors—men, too, who, as there is every reason to anticipate, will work cordially and well with him.

BOTH the Times of Ceylon and the Ceylon Observer give full details of the wreck of the Indus near Trincomalee. The latter thus summarises the occurrence:—

The Indus having been found to be out of her course and close to land at daylight on Sunday, the course was altered two points, but the lead was not hoisted. An hour after she grounded on the Mullaitivu shoal while going at full speed, and lay bumping badly on the sand and leaking slowly forward. At 2 p.m. she floated and slid astern and bumped on the anchor laid out with a warp, which made a hole in the stern compartment. The water increased and burst in the bulkhead, rushing into the engine-room and sinking the vessel eight feet more. At ten at night she finally sank altogether in thirty feet. The passengers had previously been landed at Mullaitivu. H.M.S. Ranger arrived on Tuesday morning, and brought away the passengers, all well, and most of the crew. The captain and others remained at the wreck; £40,000 in gold has gone down; also the passengers' baggage. No lives were lost. The flag-ship arrived last afternoon. The weather is still favourable, and the sea is moderate.

LATER intelligence of November 10th says:—

The Indus is settling down. No lives have been lost. The Ranger has arrived here with all the passengers.

THE detailed narrative of a passenger, published in the Ceylon papers, comments severely on the conduct of the Captain, especially after the accident. This will, of course, form the subject of judicial investigation. It is not a little singular that this particular locality is that in which the greatest number of accidents have happened to the ships of the usually fortunate P. and O. Company.

It was hardly to be anticipated that the war with Burma would be popular in India. The Native papers object to it in toto, as may be seen from a specimen or two of their utterances, which we subjoin. Why, they say, should India "pay the shot?"—

The conquest of Burma will extend English territory and enhance English prestige, but what gain will that be to the Natives of India? Why should the expenses of the Burmese war be defrayed by India? The English do anything they like, for India is not governed by public opinion, but in justice England ought to pay the whole expenses of the war.—Suravi and Putaka.

We doubt whether ten lakhs a month will cover all the expenses of the war. This outlay ought to be borne by the English trading company, for the conquest of Burma will not benefit India in any way. When war is undertaken for the benefit of English merchants, they ought to bear the charges.—Bharatbasi.

Even less pleasant reading are the extracts which follow, and which accuse England of bullying the weak, while it kotows to the strong. Under the late Administration the charge was true "up to the hilt;" and, though we believe in the consistent—and what in private life we should call gentlemanly—conduct of the present Government, we cannot conceal from ourselves that the vicissitudes of Parliamentary existence give an inconsequence, an appearance of "hand to mouth policy," to our proceedings as a nation, which lend too much of reality to the bitter sarcasm:—

The Subodha Patrika says:—The invasion of Burma has been sanctioned, and people are moralising on the phenomenon, and contrasting this warlike promptitude and vigour towards weak Burma, which had only quarrelled over logs of wood claimed by a trading company, with the forbearance towards Russia, which had cut down hundreds of Afghan protégés of the Government. The refined ethics of European politics, however, are beyond the ken of benighted Asiatics. But does Burma annexed mean the ultima thule? Nothing of the kind. It will only open further frontiers and tribes to be taken in hand, and the Indian peasant and pedlar must enjoy the honour of paying for these enterprises which result in happiness of the British adventurer.

The Indian Spectator observes:—As we said the other day, it comes to this and this only—that Great Britain acts the bully with weak and semi-barbarous potentates; but she dare not raise her little finger, however just and pressing the cause, where even weaker and more semi-barbarous princelings are backed up by powerful rivals. They say the course taken against Thebaw is "prudent and honourable." By what standard of political ethics is the course honourable? That it is opposed to prudence even, that it promotes no political interests advantageous to the taxpayers, we may show in another article. We set out confining our attention to the two main points. We have only dealt with one. But much yet remains to be said on that as well as the other point.

No doubt it is to English, even more than to Native Indian, manufactures that the British administration of Burma will ensure a market. Indeed, the present Secretary of State for India, in addressing a meeting at Birmingham, said as much. Yet there can be no doubt that India will greatly profit in many ways. And, if India is to find the money, this is but right. Yet one can understand why the Native Press should not altogether like the idea that India should pay all, receiving the lesser, while England pays nothing, receiving the greater, benefit.

THE seventy-second Report of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company announces for the half-year a dividend of £1 0s. 4d. (in addition to the usual guaranteed interest), a balance of £1,005 being carried forward.

THE Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company have declared a half-yearly dividend of £1 7s. 6d. per cent. (in addition to the guaranteed interest), but carry over to the next account a balance of £225 8s. 4d. only. The success of the Rajputana-Malwa line, managed by this company, is very gratifying.

FROM the weekly return of Messrs. G. White and Co., of 2, Great Tower-street, we are glad to see that the imports of Indian tea, for the past five months, are 33,454,000lbs. against 31,014,000lbs. for the corresponding period of last year.

WE are inclined to agree with Native Opinion that good counsel has rarely been given to Native Princes in a better style than that adopted by Lord Dufferin:—

It is seldom that our young Princes have got so good an advice as that given to the Rajput Princes by his Excellency Lord Dufferin at the opening of the Mayo College. Lord Dufferin is not only a great statesman, but has had opportunities of acquaintance with Kings and Princes, which invest his words with great authority. He has been on terms of intimacy with several potentates, and has closely observed the forces that usually rule courts in almost all the civilised countries; and although his residence in this country has been but short, yet his penetrating intellect has already grasped the peculiar circumstances which characterise the position of Native Princes. His exhortation to them to direct their aspirations in the direction of triumphs of peace and prosperity and to emulate the warlike deeds of their ancestors by peaceful achievements of their own, is just what our Native Princes should remember as if it were engraved upon their hearts.

OUR Indian Mirror is just a wee bit too exclusive. Few Native Princes or noblemen come to England, and few Englishmen visit India, without learning somewhat. Of course it is a question of "Eyes and No-eyes." Your Englishmen is a born traveller, but the visits of Native Rulers, who abandon the place where they are monarchs of all they survey, cross the black water, and live laborious days and nights in sight-seeing and being lionised in England, are rarer, and by all means to be encouraged. We find people here who are "too awfully" English, and there are assuredly many in India who are "too awfully" Native. Let us give and take; we can both learn not a little from each other. In reference to the proposed visit of the Nizam to England the Mirror says:—

We have no objection to native potentates visiting England. But the Maharajah Dhuleep Sing and the late Nawab Nazim of Murshedabad have furnished a painful warning to native Princes of the dangers of an English residence. The fates of both have shown that when they were sucked completely dry of their resources, and their cries for help became distressing, they were allowed to return to their native land. English Tutors and Private Secretaries, for the benefit of themselves and their wives, tempt Native Princes to the hill stations, and may tempt them to visit England. But it is the Englishmen who will benefit largely, and the Native Princes, not in a few cases, be ruined.

WE read with pleasure in the Ceylon Observer:—

Some years ago the Baptist Churches in South Australia raised funds to send a couple of young ladies—Misses Arnold and Gilbert—to Bengal to work as Zenana Missionaries. Last year Miss Arnold returned to Australia, and she has travelled all over the Colonies, stirring up an interest in Indian Mission work by her addresses, with such good effect, that she now returns with four more ladies to help her in the good work. The party are passengers by the s.s. Clyde, and go on in her to Bombay, thence travelling overland to Calcutta. It is a new and important departure. It is a new and important departure, this of the Australian Colonies starting a mission in India; they have long liberally supported missions to the South Sea islanders; but they are likely, as time rolls on, to do much good work in India, China, New Guinea, and other parts of the Eastern Archipelago.

WE have received from the Society of Arts a copy of the suggestions of Surgeon-General Balfour and Miss Ormerod—both well-known in connection with their investigations in entomology—for minimising the destructive ravages of insect pests in India. Dr. Balfour's suggestions, which we quote below, are entirely concurred in by Miss Ormerod, and have been by the India Office, submitted for the consideration of the Government of India. Agricultural losses in India, owing to insect ravages, are to be reckoned, not by tens or hundreds of thousands, but by millions, of pounds sterling. No better or more meritorious service could be rendered to the agricultural classes than a thorough investigation of the subject.

Miss Ormerod (says Dr. Balfour) annually reports, in this country, on the insects injurious to food crops, forest trees, and fruits, and the prevention of insect ravages.

The like of Miss Ormerod's form of reporting has never been done for India. Although every year, to some extent, and from time to time largely, losses occur there from the pests which attack agricultural produce, India has hitherto been remiss in this matter, contenting itself with references, as to individual insects or blights, to such persons as were thought likely to be able to give information. But the subject is of far too great importance to agricultural India to be left to be treated in so casual a manner, and the special knowledge now available might be utilised to describe the insects which injure the agricultural, horticultural, and forest produce of India, suggesting means of preventing, and remedies for same.

The reports should be restricted rigidly to the injurious insects, and should be half-yearly, to fit in with the two great agricultural seasons.

THE (Dacca) Bengal Times thus comments on India's indebtedness:—

Loans raised in India, consequently, chargeable on Indian revenue, amounted—according to a Blue-book published last July—at the commencement of the half-year ending March last, to £93,183,660, equal to one hundred and ten crores of rupees, that is, £51,235 without interest, £23,308,133 with interest at four and a-half per cent., £54,000 at three and a-half per cent., and the balance at four per cent. Loans raised in England for India amount to, probably, about forty millions sterling in excess of local outstandings. Is not India in comparatively an invalid pecuniary condition?

Our old friend Selim, of the Times of India, gives us another reminiscence of Ould Ireland. An English Protestant parson being driven by an Irish Catholic car driver along a lovely and weird-looking part of the Lakes of Killarney, said to him, "Now, suppose the devil was to meet us in this wild-looking place, which of us do you think he would take?" "Bedad, Sir," was the positive answer, "he would take me." "That's rather strange," said the parson, good humouredly, "when you call yourself a good Catholic, and me a heretic." "Faith, your honour, and that's just the reason," said Pat; "you see he could get you whenever he liked, but he would be very glad of an opportunity to get me when he could; bad luck to him."

Chit Chat.

PETER THE GREAT once asked a body of religious fanatics in his dominions whether smoking was more abominable than brandy drinking. "Certainly," was the answer, "for is it not written that not that which goeth into a man, but that which cometh out defileth him." Fanatics are not always fools.

No one can say that Lord Palmerston did not appreciate ability. "Some lady," says Lord Malmesbury in his amusing memoirs, "had been éprise of Garibaldi." "But Garibaldi is married; the lady cannot have him; he has a wife." Lord Palmerston: "She does not matter. We will get Gladstone to explain her away." Yet people persist in asserting that Pam, the nonchalant, did not recognise his follower's talents! Some wicked people might wish their wives "explained away."

Marion Scott, died at Dunkeld, Nov. 28, 1727, and was buried in the Abbey.

Stay, Passenger, until my life you read,
The living may get knowledge from the dead.
Five times five years I liv'd a virgin life,
Five times ten years I was a virtuous wife;
Five times ten years I was a widow chaste;
Now wearied of this mortal life I rest.
Between my cradle and the grave have seen
Eight mighty Kings of Scotland and a Queen:
Four times five years a Commonwealth I saw—
Six times the subjects rose against the law:
Twice did I see old Prelacy pull'd down,
And twice the cloak was humbled by the gown.
An end of Stuart's race I saw—nay more,
I saw my country sold for English ore.
Such desolation in my life hath been,
An end to all perfection I have seen.

She lived in the reigns of James VI., Charles I., Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., James VII., William and Mary, Anne, George I and II.

RAILWAY BOARDS are generally pretty 'cute in finding reasons for a decrease of traffic, reasons which the shareholders usually fail to estimate at the value set on them by the Directors. A certain Indian Railway Board has started a novelty in this direction. "The first-class ordinary passenger traffic shows an increase, but the other classes show a decrease, which is due to the fact that every twelfth year, of which the current year is one, is widely regarded in Hindu communities as inauspicious for marriages. The traffic of the Company's line has temporarily suffered in consequence."

A CERTAIN Mr. Lawes, an acquaintance of the Erskine family, whom he bored a good deal with his tiresome talk, died. "What shall be his epitaph?" inquired Erskine's grandlaugh. "Laus Deo," was his reply.

THE Arabs have queer notions of things in general, and of everything in particular. At Cairo a fire broke out one night in one of the leading streets, and a steam fire-engine was promptly in attendance, but not a drop of water was to be had. A crowd, principally composed of Arabs, soon assembled, and watched the proceedings with great interest. The engine stood fizzing and smoking, and every now and then the engineer would sound a shrill whistle. Every time the engine whistled the crowd would give an approving grunt, and look up at the fire, evidently expecting it would go out. Never was seen a more pathetic spectacle. It was the embodiment of faith.

MR. G. A. SALA, lecturing in Australia, referred to the scene at the interment of the late Tsar in a manner which scarcely leads one to share Mr. Gladstone's enthusiasm for the Greek Church. A passport! Why did they not put a coin in his mouth (like the obolus for the ferryman of the Styx) as entrance fee? "The gorgeous pageant," says a local report, "was dwelt upon by the lecturer in pathetic tones, and the ceremony was vividly portrayed from beginning to end. The procession, which included the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, was represented with a skill demanding the highest exercise of art, and the groups of spectators as well as the final acts of homage done to the illustrious dead according to the rites of the Russo-Greek Church were invested with a striking reality. The last formality preceding interment was to deposit in the lifeless hand of the mangled corpse a document addressed to the Apostle St. Peter, which, true to the traditional reverence for passports which forms part of the Russian religion and political creed, besought practical aid and protection for the departed monarch on his way to Paradise."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

WILD LIFE IN CANARA AND GANJAM.*

Our author's experiences in wild life were on both sides of the Southern part of the Indian Peninsula. In Canara he had charge of more than 100 miles of seaboard, in Ganjam fully as much. These of our readers who have travelled in South-Western France will remember the lagoons which adjoin the Landes. Something of the same kind, but called by the appropriate name of backwater, stretches along the Southern portion of the coast. On the West, where the continuous sheltered water through Cochin and Travancore has been the salvation of many a vessel; on the east, where we have a line of backwater from Lake Chilka, northwards and southwards, which is interrupted only by the embouchures of the rivers. A successful attempt was made (p. 212) by Mr. Forbes, during the last year of his administration in Ganjam, to unite the lake with the Ganjam river; and, no doubt, much more could be done in order that "an uninterrupted inland waterway may be perfected along the entire coast."

So much for the littoral of the country in which Mr. Forbes' work had to be performed. He arrived in Canara almost immediately after the deposal of the maniac Rajah of Coorg, a despot who seems to have been a kind of cross between Ivan the Terrible of Russia and the Old Man of the Mountain; but whose relentless cruelty does not appear to have alienated his adherents, as the story (p. 4) of two of them who, at his order, precipitated themselves, with the certainty of death, from a lofty tree, and whose wives were contented because "the Rajah's good pleasure had been done," seems to prove.

Another curious story is given us of this worthy. Having been told that God was the only superior of the Queen of England he insisted on having His name written down. When his own expulsion had been effected, and his palace was occupied by European troops, it was found that all round the hall he had emblazoned his own name and titles, then the name of the Almighty, and lastly that of the Queen of England. A somewhat analogous story occurs to us of some more than usually asinine Celtic chief, who, having dined, sent a trumpeter to the top of an adjacent hill to announce to other kings that they were now at liberty to partake of their own meal—arcades ambo.

Mr. Gordon went through the Sawunt-wari insurrection, and gives a very interesting account of his adventures in the wild country which was its scene. The revolt was speedily suppressed, and, at this distance of time, it may offend no one's susceptibilities to say that it ought never to have occurred. It caused, among other casualties, the death of Captain Tainton, reputed "to be the best shot and the best racquet player in Southern India, and unrivalled in the skill with which he could use almost any kind of weapon." One anecdote regarding the captain (of whom it used to be said, as of the present Captain Burton, that whatever he did, he did better than anyone else) is worth preserving. "He once made a singular wager (which he won) that he would, with a pellet bow and a supply of the hard clay pellets used with it, prevent an antagonist placed face to face with him from loading and discharging a pistol. With an increasing shower of pellets he proceeded to knock about the pistol, the powder flask, and the knuckles of his antagonist, till the latter had to give up attempting to load, and confess himself beaten." Being mortally wounded, he "turned as the shot struck him, caught sight of the smoke of the matchlock in the bush, and shot the man dead just before he dropped himself." A little later on we have an instance (p. 106) of what we can only call heroism on the part of Mr. Forbes's "Concani peon," Manoel, "one of the bravest and ugliest little men that ever stepped," says his master, who seems to have had a knack of securing the attachment of his "henchmen." We were, says Mr. Forbes, "one day fording a rapid stream . . . when Manoel, who was behind me, carrying my gun, was suddenly taken off his legs, and disappeared completely under water for a second or two, all except the hand which held my gun, the hand and gun alone were visible above the surface, and when a comrade dragged him up, the gun was still untouched by the water." Like master, like man. Rely on it, a good "henchman" such as Manoel had no ordinary master.

The falls of Gairsappa have, as our author observes, been long (and deservedly) thought one of the wonders of the world, nor is Mr. Forbes behindhand in recognising their beauty. Like the Handek on the Grimsel pass, the Gairsappa presents the union of different streams combining to make one superb fall; yet not one. "When the time of high flood has passed, the waters are found to have parted into four divisions, each of which, as it passes over the brink of the precipice, assumes an individual character totally unlike the rest, just as four members of one family may be found differing in face and form and temper, so as to make their common origin matter of surprise."

Nec diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum—

* "Wild Life in Canara and Ganjam." By Gordon S. Forbes, late of the Madras Civil Service. London: Swan Sonnenschein and Co, 1885.

No two had aspect quite the same
Yet something did their sisterhood proclaim.

Mr. Forbes has naturally a good deal to say about the aborigines of Ganjam and Orissa. Their condition certainly does not place our administration in a very favourable light. Two tribes used to be prominent; the Khonds, who are a fairly typical aboriginal race, and the Todas. Of the latter not more than 500 now (p. 149) survive. Whether or not they have, like the Red Indians, succumbed to the influences of rum, we are not told. At best they were a debased race, and, could we be sure that their place would be filled by worthier substitutes, we should hardly regret their disappearance.

With the Khonds we have had a great deal of trouble. They are addicted to human sacrifices—called “Meriah” offerings—who are immolated to the “Earth-goddess,” in order to restore fertility in seasons of drought (p. 243). The late Captain Macpherson appears to have been the first to discover this practice, some of the details relating to which call to mind those narrated by Prescott, in his excellent “Conquest of Mexico,” as having been habitual among the Aztecs—many intended victims were released—only, however, by a display of military force. And Mr. Forbes is under the impression (one by no means universally entertained) that the Khonds have entirely abandoned their evil ways in this respect, as well as in the scarcely less heinous offence of the exposure of female infants.

In one of Mr. Forbes's raids on recalcitrant tribes he had to demand an oath of renewed fealty to a Raja rejoicing in the name of Bodagudda. “A bit of earth, a squirrel's skin, and a lizard were placed on a tiger skin, together with a dagger, and the oath was pronounced over these symbols”—a form of oath we do not remember to have seen mentioned before.

We have had space only to touch, as it were, the fringe of the interesting matter contained in the volume, together with much information about the country, the people, and the flora (which includes a tree with pods more than three feet long, the seeds forming a kind of natural rattle). The book is extremely instructive as to a part of India respecting which one hears less than might be desired, and well merits attentive perusal.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND PASTIMES.*

It was a foregone conclusion that this book would be amusing, as well as instructive. The noble author, who is well-known as a proficient in every sport or pastime involving pluck, and steadiness of hand and eye, from Hunting down to “Aunt Sally,” was sure not to allow the perusal of his work to pass unrewarded by anecdote, while the literary ability of Mr. Mowbray Morris, and the artistic skill of Miss Biddulph, and Messrs. Sturgess and Compton, have combined to render it not less attractive to the eye of the casual reader, than valuable as a repertory of information on the subject of which it treats.

The history of hunting is traced, and well traced, if not quite to the time of the first mighty hunter, Nimrod, the prototype of the Osbaldestons and Assheton Smiths, at all events to the eleventh century, when Anselm of Canterbury forbade the hunters to chase a “gentle hare” which had taken refuge under his horse. The woes of hares have been the theme of verse ever since the time of Walter de Mapes, and probably at a much earlier date.

“Quid feci hominibus
Quod me sequuntur canibus?”

(“What is it that hares can do
That men with hounds should them pursue?”)

is a fair rendering of poor Puss' complaints. But poor Puss is by no manner of means first on the roster of quadrupeds to be hunted; she must certainly “yield the pas” to stags, and to the bushy-tailed creature whom to kill, otherwise than after a fair chase, is, in hunting districts, to ruin one's reputation here, and one's chance of salvation hereafter. Needless to say that the fox, of all beasts feræ nature, gives rise to most anecdotes; not to add that these are, without exception, well told. There is, too, a chapter about otter-hunting, respecting which the late Mr. Grantley Berkeley told, with exceptional zest, some of his racy stories.

So much for the amusing part of the work. But much lies behind in the shape of valuable information, and we only hope it will be duly appreciated. Unfortunately there is no one so terribly “pig-headed” as the man who most needs instruction, the half-fledged “sportsman;” the chances are, indeed, ten to one that he but half reads the very chapters whence he would learn most; while men like the authors of this capital volume “Know what's right, nor only so,

But also practise what they know.”

We can truly recommend this book to the attentive study of everyone who (whether he think himself so or not) is a tyro in sporting matters, and to the companionship in “off-days,” of every genuine lover of the pigskin.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND PASTIMES.*

The second and third volumes of the Badminton Library deal with fishing, a subject which is treated in a most attractive manner by Mr. Cholmondeley-Pennell, whose qualifications for the task are unquestioned. He has also been fortunate in securing the co-operation of other well-known anglers, whose essays on special branches of the art add considerably to the usefulness of the work. He tells us, in the preface, his reason for handing over the fly-fishing department to other pens; it is that his opinions on this subject, already published by him, are not, at any rate, yet generally accepted by fly-fishers. Most fishermen are, we imagine, acquainted with these opinions, and will, we believe, agree with Mr. Cholmondeley-Pennell that the time has not yet come for embodying them in a treatise on the art. We notice, with the greatest pleasure, much that is new in these volumes; they form an agreeable contrast to many books on fishing, which consist almost entirely of extracts from former works. Indeed, the only book upon which Mr. Pennell has drawn at all largely is his own “Practical Angler.” We see no objection to this: when a man has once written on a subject, unless time has altered his views, his readers are certainly no gainers if he endeavours to put the same information in an altered form. The chapters on tackle and fishing gear, in both volumes, are of peculiar interest. They contain the very latest improvements and refinements in rods, reels, lines, and last, but by no means least, in hooks. The eyed-hook question is fully gone into, and on the merits of turning the eye up or down much is said that is well worth reading. One great advantage of the eyed-hook is that the angler can use any thickness of gut he pleases with any fly; and this is often a great gain. We mention this, as we do not remember seeing it noticed before, though it has, without doubt, occurred to many. The Fisheries Exhibition produced several useful contrivances, which are fully described in these pages. The first volume deals with salmon, trout, and grayling; the second with pike and other coarse fish. We commend both to the fisherman, who will find much to interest, instruct, and amuse him. The anecdotes which occur in the books are all good, and the paper, print, and illustrations admirable in every respect.

MEDICAL EXPERIENCES IN INDIA.†

Perhaps, scarcely excepting lawyers, no professional men see more of the oddities and quiddities of human life, or have their organs of observation more developed, than medical men. Among no class do the poor find more sympathy, or friends more racy stories, and “better company.” So that, when a work by a Doctor Sahib is not exclusively professional, one is sure to find in it many remarks which might escape the non-professional observer; and this is certainly the case with Mr. Maunsell's Book. With the details of operations we have, as “laymen,” no concern, though some of them are interesting enough. One would suppose that a man would know whether or not he had lost a leg, an arm, or an eye. Yet our author's patients will not believe that a cataract has been removed from the eye, unless all the relations, who are present at the side of the charpoy, can have what is, in all senses, ocular demonstration of its removal. Each lens, when removed, “was placed on a piece of paper, and sent out to the anxious relatives, by whom it was carefully treasured, after having been passed round for the inspection of the general public.” One “serious old Hindoo expressed his delight, astonishment, and unbounded gratitude, when he found placed in his hands the white object which for years past he had seen in his wife's eye, and which he knew to be the cause of her blindness; he prayed that I might speedily become a lord, and finally a god.”

Our medico's remarks on Kashmir are instructive, though they hardly betray much sympathy with a Native State, but just leaving the vicious groove of mismanagement. Indeed, his comments on other States—Solon, for instance—are the parts of the work which most betray the “Queen's officer,” as he would have been called in pre-Mutiny times. As of men, so of States, “Nemo repente fuit turpissimus, or præstantissimus: very bad or super-excellent. Of course, the “Purdah” difficulty was everywhere in full force.

The, to us, unusual form of Hydropathy, which consists in putting infants and adults under a jet of water, directed, through a hollow bamboo, from the river on to the head, as a soporific (which is fully described at pp. 71-3), may interest Dr. Fernie or his successors, and is one among many proofs how much medical science can learn from simple traditional methods of treatment.

Mr. Maunsell has well used his not very long stay in India, and has produced an interesting little book. He has learnt much, and has imparted not a little. He wisely remarks, in a passage (p. 101) with which we must conclude our notice, on the exceptional opportunities offered by India for the acquisition of medical experience:—

* “The Badminton Library of Sports and Pastimes.” Fishing. By H. Cholmondeley-Pennell, late H.M. Inspector of Sea Fisheries. With Contributions by the Marquis of Exeter, Henry R. Francis, M.A., Major John P. Traherne, and G. Christopher Davies.

† “Notes of Medical Experiences in India, Principally with reference to Diseases of the Eye.” By S. E. Maunsell, L.R.C.S.I., Surgeon-Major, Medical Staff. London: H. K. Lewis, 1885.

"During his career an Officer in the medical service of the army will not fail to find frequent opportunities for keeping himself conversant with the subject, and should India fall to his lot, he will find there ready at hand a field for its practice rarely equalled; probably unsurpassed." And again (p. 78):—"There is no country in which an Officer of the medical service of the army is called upon to serve, where he will encounter disease on the scale it occurs in India."

CHOLERA.*

This Blue-book—for such it is, albeit not published by order of Lords or Commons—is as yet printed for distribution only, though we presume that it will eventually be published. The report of Drs. Klein and Gibbs is of great medical interest. After investigations in India for which every facility was, "by superior order," accorded them, they have reported their conclusions, wholly opposed to Dr. Koch's theory that the "comma" bacillus—not the least like an English printed comma, but rather an all but straight stroke which, in foreign manuscript, indicates that stop—is inseparable from cholera; a conclusion obviously of vast importance. The drawings illustrating their report render abundantly clear the nature of the experiments instituted by them for "cultivating" on wet and dry textures, in gelatine, and other preparations, the real comma bacillus, with which various animals were injected. The India Office Committee which was called on to express an opinion has confined itself to recording the experiences and views of its individual members. Indeed, Sir William Gull hinted that the whole inquiry as to Koch's alleged discovery of the immediate cause of cholera, however interesting, "might turn out after all to be a matter of scientific rather than of present practical value." He thought it probable that sanitation "might enable us to defend ourselves against the invasions of cholera before science has discovered the essential cause of the disease." We shall rejoice if the investigation should be as purely academic as is presaged by so high an authority.

THE Indian Mirror questions very much whether a purely English education in England for Indian boys is at all necessary, as it is sure to have "the effect only of Anglicising them thoroughly." Our contemporary has no objection to any number of Indian youths going to England provided their presence there "has the effect of Hinduising Englishmen," a contingency so highly improbable, we wonder it ever entered into any calculation connected with the future.

UPPER BURMA.

THE fate of Upper Burma is still undecided, and a full report from Mr. Bernard, the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, who is probably, ere this, in Mandalay, will doubtless influence the decision. Lord Dufferin will, however, look before he leaps, and proposes to be at Rangoon, en route to the late Burmese capital, on the 20th of January.

The English Press in India is as unanimous in favouring, as the Native journals are in deprecating, annexation. The discovery, in the Palace at Mandalay, of documents of much importance, relating to the Burmese treaties with France and Italy, will go far to modify the opinions of many anti-annexationists, and certainly lends weight to the oft-repeated contention that, were we to set up a nominal King, he might be potential for evil, while he could hardly be so for good.

Although it is an open secret that even the late Administration had been driven to the conclusion that hostilities with Thebaw were inevitable—a fact its members have carefully concealed on the hustings—it is the present Cabinet who have actually undertaken the expedition, and who must be prepared to deal with its consequences. With them it lies to decide the future of Upper Burma; and we should hope that the decision will not be unduly delayed. Above all, we should protest against this or any other question affecting the welfare of India, which is ripe for solution, being left open to be dealt with by any possible future Government, actuated, as was the last, by a regard for anything but the real interests of England, may we not say, for deference to nothing but the vanity and vindictiveness of its head, and from which no one knew what to expect. We should be prepared for anything, and should scarce be surprised at hearing a (Caucus-managed) plébiscite in Upper Burma advocated as the best means of arriving at a satisfactory solution of the "annexation or no annexation" difficulty!

RESTORATION OF GWALIOR TO MAHARAJAH SCINDIA.

THE occasions on which the British God Terminus draws back from a spot in India on which he has once "put his foot down" are not so many in number as not to deserve special mention. One recent occasion will occur to the mind of every reader; we refer, of course, to the restoration to the Rajah of Mysore of a portion of his ancestral dominions. Another certainly, in some points of view, not the less important of the two, that of the fortress of Gwalior to Scindia, was announced but a few days back, and it is not a little singular to observe, parenthetically, that both retrocessions, in themselves just, but which so-called Liberals were never liberal enough even to take into serious consideration, have been carried into effect under resolutions adopted during the incumbency of a Conservative Government; Lord Salisbury holding in the one case the Indian Secretaryship, in the other the post of Prime Minister.

Gwalior has a history chequered to a degree, to which the natural position of the place gives it an unquestionable right. Situated on an isolated rock, nearly 350 feet high, and rendered precipitous in every part by the handiwork of nature or art, the stronghold occupies a space of more than a mile in length, by about a quarter of a mile in depth, crowning the rock, and absolutely commanding the city and plain below. Built in 773, it came within the range of our ken and cannon in 1780, not, however, to be long held by us, for the Scindia of those days left nothing untried until, four years later, he re-entered in triumph the palace of his ancestors. Eighteen years elapsed ere we again tried conclusions with its strength, and in 1802 it fell to us, only to be restored at the peace of 1805. Intestine disturbances in the State were held in 1843, under the bellicose Governor-Generals of Lord Ellenborough, to necessitate armed intervention in its affairs, and once more we ruled, though but for a short time only, in Gwalior.

But its more recent history may be said to begin with its occupation, during the universal disturbance of the Mutinies, by Scindia's revolted troops, the Gwalior Contingent, in 1857, and their expulsion by the late Lord Strathnairn, who, on his way northward, in command of the Central Indian Field Force, drove the rebels into the fortress, which, after a vigorous bombardment from the neighbouring hills, extending over some days, he made untenable for them, and which he reoccupied. With that decisive siege vanished for ever the prestige which had attached to the place, and which, in presence of modern artillery—so greatly developed in power since the Mutiny times—has no longer any raison d'être. It may have been a wise measure of precaution in the then unsettled state of the country, not at once to replace so strong a position in the hands of a Native Prince, who, though among the faithless faithful found, had shown his inability to hold it in the hour of peril. But the necessity for its retention—a retention which nothing but necessity* could justify—soon passed away. There cannot, indeed, be a doubt that, had Lord Mayo lived, he would have urged its restoration to Scindia, who, though he at first acquiesced in leaving it for awhile in our hands, yet very reluctantly abandoned to our keeping, even temporarily, the fortress of his ancestors.

* "The interest of the subject," says the Times, "begins with Lord Canning's promise to the Maharajah in 1860, at Allahabad, to restore the fort as soon as it could be done with safety."

This lasted till 1864, when, as an apparently* inspired article in the Times puts it, Scindia was irritated, not only by the distinction of old and the erection of fresh buildings, but by a gross, though unintentional, mark of disrespect.

But what galled him more than anything else was the refusal of the guard through a too strict devotion to duty to admit him into the fort while Sir John Lawrence was staying there. It was after this incident that Scindia began, through a sense of being overshadowed by British power in his own Principality, to lay stress on the old promise that we would restore the fort as soon as it could be done with safety. This dissatisfaction first found open official expression in 1869, at the time of Scindia's visit to Lord Mayo at Calcutta, and his complaint took three forms, the enforced distribution of his own army, the retention of Gwalior Fort, and the presence of a British force at Morar.

Lord Mayo was so impressed with the justice of the Maharajah's complaints that he, anxious, moreover, to conciliate the Prince who, of the Mahratta chieftains, holds the first, and in all India, the second rank among the Native Rulers, formally placed on record his opinion that Scindia's desire as regards the fortress was one with which we were in honour bound to comply.

The construction (says the article above quoted) of a railway close to Gwalior, the selection of a preferable site to Morar for a cantonment, and the stipulation that the fort should not be strengthened, would, in his opinion, have justified the restoration of Gwalior fort, which we were bound in honour to give back to Scindia. The Midland Railway of India will perfect our communications, and the desired spot for the cantonment has been discovered at Jhansi, where it will be easy to establish a far healthier and far more valuable military station for our own troops than the unhealthy and cholera-stricken encampment of Morar. Lord Mayo recommended this course being taken in August, 1871, but it is only now that the necessary conditions have been fulfilled, and have thus rendered the project practically feasible.

In so far as the restoration of the place to its rightful owner involves the removal of our own troops to a healthier station than Morar, it may truly be said that "it blesses him that gives and him that takes." But we fear that the concession has, as to the matter, been shorn of much of its grace by a delay of twenty years, and, as to the manner, this is assuredly the case. To give "not grudgingly" is a precept applicable to other matters besides Church offertories. And we cannot help thinking that to make Scindia pay fifteen lakhs (probably Public Works' Department valuation, and we all know what that means) for buildings in a great measure useless to him, before allowing him to re-enter on his own, is a proceeding quite unworthy of any large-minded Government.

The language used by Lord Dufferin, in announcing the restoration (and which we printed in our last issue), was eminently calculated to soothe and to conciliate the sturdy warrior; and his exclamations of rapturous delight on quitting the Durbar give reason to hope that the unconscionable delay which has occurred will have left on his mind no permanently unfavourable impression.

PAPER has been put to many uses, carriage wheels have been made out of it, houses have been built of it, and now in Germany it is being used for factory chimneys. In Saxony one has been constructed over fifty feet high, which is said to be elastic and fireproof.

* It is, however, proper to observe that a correspondent, evidently speaking from actual knowledge, writes to a contemporary that—"The cause of Scindia's insistence on the fulfilment of Lord Canning's promise that the Fort of Gwalior should be in due time restored to him was, I believe, not so much the uneasiness caused by the demolition of buildings inside the walls as the mounting of guns on the top of the rock battlement directly commanding the town and Scindia's Palace. One particularly conspicuous piece of ordnance which commanded his durbar room was an especial eyesore to the Maharajah. It was only," he adds, "the influence and address of Sir Henry Daly which prevented Scindia making a direct appeal to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, when he was at Gwalior in 1876, that the Rock Fortress should be restored to him." (In any case, it is clear that not the slightest consideration was vouchsafed to the Maharajah's natural and legitimate susceptibilities.)

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

WE take from a late issue of the Naval and Military Gazette the following sensible remarks on "India in Parliament." We are glad to see that the more objectionable of the Anglo-Indian candidates for a seat in the Commons have failed to secure one.

"Ever since the Mutiny there has been a section of Englishmen who have taken as their text the commonplace saying, 'India for the Indians,' and have preached almost a doctrine of rebellion against British power to the Bengali Babus, who, having had a thin veneer of English education, now aspire, like Mr. Parnell's Irishmen, to govern themselves. The weakest, the most timid, and the most incapable of responsibility of all the Eastern races, the Hindus of Bengal have been flattered into the belief that the day will come when England will resign her great trust, and leave India to them. She might as well leave India again to the tiger and the wild elephant; and although every thinking Englishman who has studied India must know this, yet English gentlemen, who profess to be patriots also, have not hesitated to inculcate the pernicious doctrine into the minds of their vain and gullible hearers. India won by the sword must be held by the sword, although the blade may rest in the scabbard. It has always been so won and so held, and the dusky millions under our rule recognise and appreciate the fact. But there are writers and orators who seem ashamed to acknowledge that we have conquered and hold by the strong arm; and even to-day, when the submission of the tyrant King of Ava has become known, journalists are expressing a hope that we will give the people of Upper Burmah a better rule than they have hitherto enjoyed! The writer, who is so anxious upon this point, apologises for our conduct in going to Ava at all as 'an' extreme step taken after displaying years of forbearance towards the savage ruler and the intrusive alien seeking an empire.' But our conquest of the country means peace and prosperity to the inhabitants, as our conquest of India has brought peace and prosperity there. England has no cause to blush for harvests reaped there by the sword."

HERE is an Eastern version of the death of all the first-born, which is so much at variance with the received account that it is really worth repeating:—"It would appear, that some days previously, all heads of families were called upon to furnish returns of the numbers of first-born children in their possession. But, either from defective education, or other causes, the return in question was, in most cases, very imperfectly rendered. One man, who had six children, would return them all as first-born, and consequently lost the whole batch; while another, who had a round dozen, returned none as first-born, and therefore suffered no domestic calamity. This account was given by an intelligent native, who said that he remembered the circumstances perfectly, so that it must be true!"

TELEGRAPHS.

Eastern, Limited ...
----------------------	--

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 4th Dec.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 2nd Dec.

THE Times correspondent has now been permitted to return to Mandalay. He telegraphs as follows from Rangoon, under date 17th:—

A large body of Shans, led by a Buddhist priest, claiming to be a religious and political leader, made a serious raid yesterday into the Shoaygyeen district, in the south-east of British Burmah. Telegraphic communication being interrupted, the details at present received are of a meagre character. The Shans have looted and burnt four considerable villages in British territory. They are reported to have burnt the town of Sittang, and to be threatening Shoaygyeen town. Mr. Symes, secretary of the Chief Commissioner, on whom the government devolves during Mr. Bernard's absence in Mandalay, acted with great vigour and judgment. Within three hours of the intelligence reaching Rangoon a flying column was despatched under telegraphic instructions, from Toungoo, in a special train, to the Shoaygyeen district. It is expected that the Shans will be intercepted and severely punished.

DISTURBANCES still continue in the Pegu district. No European lives have been lost, and despite the difficulties presented by the country, no doubt is entertained of its speedy pacification; the insurrectionary movement having, indeed, been already, in some degree, checked. Mr. Bernard assumed control of affairs at Mandalay on the 15th. His continued presence there is the more necessary, as the Viceroy's state of health is likely to prevent his proposed visit to Burma.

It is stated from Calcutta that the prospects of the annexation of Burma "are considered more hopeful than they were a week ago." We can only say to the present Government, "Know your own mind, and, what you do, do quickly." Nothing, in the East, creates difficulties so much as suspense and uncertainty.

WE have received the following telegrams from the India Office. As regards the missing Europeans in Burma:—

"CALCUTTA, Dec., 20th.

"At outbreak of hostilities there were sixteen Europeans in western Burmese forests. Of these, Antram and G. Calogreedy reached Mandalay in safety shortly after the surrender of town. Concerning the others the only trustworthy information is following telegram just received from Rangoon:—'Ross, in a letter to Prendergast, dated Mingin, 7th December, states that he, Roberts, Allen, Bates, Hill, O. Rückstuhl, Moncure, and Gois surrendered to Mandalay official Thandawzin 21st ult. He, Bates, Hill, and Rückstuhl were placed in goal at Mingin, but released, and well treated by Woon on news arriving of capture of Mandalay. Roberts, Allen, and Moncure, who remained in launch, are said to have been murdered. Messenger who brought Ross's letter states he saw them cut down. Gois was taken up country by Thandawzin to work the launch at Kindat. Morgan, J. Rückstuhl, and Bretts were placed in goal. British expedition left Mandalay for Chindwin 13th December in Tigris.'"

"From Viceroy, Calcutta, 21st December, 1885.

"Political Agent, Munipoor, has received a letter from Morgan stating that himself, Bretto, two Rückstuhls, Hill, Ross, and Baker are well and safe, but that Allen, Moncure, and Roberts have been murdered."

"Thebaw, with Queen Soopayalat, the Queen mother, two Princesses and retinue, arrived at Madras on Monday evening. He was landed next morning, and was conveyed at once to the mansion which had been prepared for him."

NEARLY all the Indian papers comment severely on the nomination of a comparatively unknown man like Major-General Hughes to the important position of Military Member of the Viceroy's Council, when there was a possibility of securing for the post the services of a man so eminently qualified for it as the author of "The Battle of Dorking." The Times correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs:—

The appointment of General Hughes in succession to General Wilson as military member of the Council has taken the country by surprise, and has furnished matter for more or less severe comment to almost every newspaper in India. No objection is taken to General Hughes personally, and even those journals which criticise the appointment most unfavourably have not a word to say against him. The pre-eminent qualifications of General Chesney were, however, so universally admitted that it is difficult to understand how they came to be overlooked, and regret is freely expressed on all sides that the Secretary of State has lost the opportunity of placing the Indian War Department under the charge of an officer who, by common consent, was of all possible candidates the one best fitted for that important charge.

THOSE of our readers who have any knowledge of Colonel Alikhanoff's "Caucasian" way of treating tribes will not be surprised to hear that a letter from Merv states that Colonel Alikhanoff will probably be removed from his post, owing to disagreement with the inhabitants and the complaints which they have made against him.

OUR Calcutta friends are, as is right and proper, to have the first sight of the articles about to be sent from Bengal to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition. The selection is considered a good one, though, as we all know, Bengal "produces few of the more beautiful articles of Indian workmanship."

On dit, avers the Naval and Military Gazette, that the following telegram was sent from London to General Prendergast:—"You have done splendidly. Don't think I could have done better myself!"

WE have never had a very exalted idea of the sanctity in which examination papers are held by those who print them. Here is a case in point from the Bombay Gazette:—

The other day we published the following communication, with a full consciousness of the inconvenience which we should cause, but with a very strong conviction that we were thereby doing a public service:—"It has become an open secret that the questions for the Matriculation Examination this year have leaked out from some quarter or other. In order to prove this I send you herewith the questions to be set to-morrow. You will be doing a great boon to the public if you print them in your issue of to-morrow." The following is the mathematical paper enclosed:—"Euclid.—Book I., 21st proposition; Book II., 12th proposition; Book III., 31st proposition; Book IV., 2nd proposition. Deduction:—The difference of any two sides of a triangle is less than the third." As we anticipated, in publishing the above we necessitated the preparation of a new paper. But the inconvenience that must have resulted from this is a small matter compared with the something much more serious than inconvenience which would have been involved if the day's examination had been begun, and a select few—or even one candidate—had been clandestinely in possession of the paper. It will be seen, from comments and communications which we have published elsewhere, that the "leaking out" has been of portentous dimensions. It led yesterday to the inevitable result of a suspension of the examinations.

SPEAKING of this reminds us of a case in the Upper Provinces in which the printer, having been supplied with paper for the exact number of copies which he had to print, and searched to see that he had no more, ingeniously earned a bribe offered him for a copy by sitting down on the type, having previously donned white nether garments!

CONSIDERING that last year's Indian team for Wimbledon fell through merely because the project had not been started in time to collect the necessary funds, are we premature in asking what is being done to ensure immunity from a similar fiasco next year? It was "too late to mend" matters last season; it is not a whit too soon to begin preparations for that which another six months will bring on us.

WE much regret that Dr. Leitner should have thought himself justified, on the occasion of an inquiry into some of the items of expenditure at the Punjab University, in forthwith resigning his post as Registrar in a manner which seems to us both precipitate and undignified; and for reasons which will not, we think, bear examination. We should be pleased to learn that matters have, even at the eleventh hour, been so arranged that the University may not lose Dr. Leitner's valuable services:—

The Shafiq-i-Hind of Lahore has a long article on the above, in which, after expressing regret at the event, and giving a brief account of the circumstances which led to the appointment of a committee of inquiry, the writer says:—"The facts stated above clearly show that the resolution was such as to leave Dr. Leitner no alternative but to resign and sever his connection with an institution which he had reared like his child from the day of its birth to the age of puberty, and leave it to the tender mercies of guardians, who neither know nor sympathise with its habits, but who on the contrary are leading it in a direction by no means calculated to promote its well-being. In conclusion, we beg to remind the Senate that it has still a sacred duty to perform, and that is to acknowledge Dr. Leitner's twenty-one years' eminent services in a tangible manner. Even the bitterest enemies of Dr. Leitner cannot deny that the Punjab University is the result of Dr. Leitner's unwearied and incessant exertions; and it behoves our countrymen to express their gratitude of his valuable services, by raising a memorial in his honour worthy of the country and of the learned doctor, so that whenever he thinks of the people of this province, he might say:—'Oh, they are grateful and remember their benefactors.'"

ANOTHER legal oddity. The Statesman has the subjoined. We should like to know under what absurd Act or absurd construction of an Act, so preposterous an anomaly can be justified. Truly Parliamentary draughtsmen get their salaries without any great expenditure of brains!

A Negro hotel-keeper at Lucknow, who has been committed for trial at the ensuing sessions of the North-West Provinces High Court at Allahabad, has claimed right of trial by a jury of his peers, on the ground that he is a European British subject, having been born in Jamaica. An up-country paper points out that whilst a Negro under these circumstances can claim this privilege, the pure-blooded great-grandson of an Englishman born in the country cannot claim it.

PERHAPS no one cause has ruined so many Native families so much as the inordinate expense to which family pride and social requirements lead both high and low to expose themselves whenever a wedding occurs in the family. Any well-considered movement to reduce these expenses deserves support. We read with pleasure that "the rules for curtailment of marriage expenses amongst the Amast Kaests are obtaining numerous adherents in the Bhaugulpore district. The example set in Bhaugulpore is bearing fruit in the Monghyr, Deoghur, and Hazareebaugh districts, where crowded meetings have been held, expressing sympathy with the reform, and adopting the rules framed by the Bhaugulpore Babaha Sanskarini Sabha on the subject."

THE Delhi Gazette tells us that King Thebaw has been presented with a son by the younger princess, Soopyalat's youngest sister. The king has been attempting to soothe the jealousy of Soopyalat by telling her he was not happy at the event; since he felt sure that this son would rebel against him some day. What his wife said in reply is not recorded.

WE commend to Mr. Cotton, to the Indian "delegates," and to all and sundry the depreciators of this country's work in India, the subjoined account of Colonel Grey's work in Ferozepore. It is not every day that such facts come to light, though doubtless excellent work is being done in other districts besides Ferozepore, and Sirza, to which we lately referred. The men who work the best are the least likely to sound their own trumpet; but, at a time when all British work is, by a certain noisy clique, depreciated because it is British, and everything done by Natives extolled because it is not done by a "white skin," it is well, from time to time, to point to definite facts which are not altogether in consonance with such opinions:

Particulars are given of an interesting irrigation work which has been undertaken in the Ferozepore district under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel Grey, C.S.I. The system followed in carrying out this work was to induce the villagers in the district to construct irrigation canals at their own expense under the supervision of Government officers. Money was advanced by Government on loan to village communities for this purpose, and upwards of 600 miles of canals, capable of irrigating upwards of 130,000 acres of land, were constructed by the villagers. The total rainfall in the Ferozepore district only averages 18 inches, and it can be easily understood of what great service the canals are. The establishment appointed to manage the canals is maintained at a cost of Rs. 12,600 per annum, of which one-sixth is paid by the Mamdot estate, on which the canals have been constructed, and the rest by a cess levied from the villages irrigated. The Mamdot canals have been constructed and maintained at a cost of Rs. 250,000, and the direct income derived from them by the Nawab up to date has been Rs. 116,000. Indirectly the State has profited to a still larger extent, as a large area of waste land belonging to the Nawab has been brought under cultivation, and the income from this source has amounted to Rs. 357,000 in the last nine years. With regard to the canals constructed by the irrigators themselves, precise details are not available, but it is calculated that the expenditure between 1875-76 and 1882-83 was about 2½ lakhs of rupees, and that the net additional income derived from the area irrigated during the same period, viz., 424,000 acres, was not less than two lakhs of rupees yearly. On neither the canals constructed by the Nawab, nor those constructed by the irrigators, has a single rupee of Government money been spent. "The result of the work of Colonel Grey and of his assistants in the Ferozepore district is," remarks the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, "that without entailing any cost whatever upon Government an extensive stretch of country has been secured against drought and restored to prosperity, and a net addition will hereafter be made to the Government revenue demand which at the most moderate computation may be put at one lakh of rupees. This is a result of which, in the opinion of Sir Charles Aitchison, any officer in India might well be proud."

CURIOUS are the coincidences which one meets in history. The last Doge of Venice occupied—we may say occupies—the last niche in the series allotted to the Doges, the last Pope who had temporal power fills the last place assigned to the long line of Popes, the last Emperor of Germany—the present mushroom Imperialism does not "count" from the present point of view—left no space for a successor in the Kaiserzaal at Frankfurt. Were all the architects prophets? Now another coincidence. The destinies of the House of Aloungphra were so bound up with those of the Sacred White Elephant, that, if aught were to "happen to" both at the same time, the dynasty was to come to grief. Now, the very day that Thebaw left Mandalay, the White Elephant—as really white as our readers are black—died! Surely the Stock Exchange will lay heavy odds on annexation?

THE remaining "Indian delegates" (the other having returned to India on the completion of the late elections) were entertained, the other day, at a farewell breakfast. Speakers and speeches were such as might have been expected. If the "delegates" have not done much good by their visit, they have done little harm, and this is probably as much as any sane person anticipated.

THE Indian Tea Gazette quotes the Englishman as saying:—

It seems now almost certain that the tea crop for the current season will fall short of the original estimates by at least two million pounds. After allowing about two million pounds for exports to the Colonies and America, and one million five hundred thousand pounds for home consumption, the quantities available for shipment to Great Britain is not expected to exceed sixty-three and a-half million pounds.

If the above, adds the Tea Gazette, be correct, any further drop in prices at home should stop, as the London market is well able to absorb the quantity of sixty odd millions.

A VERY interesting account of the many and brilliant services of the late Commander-in-Chief in India, Sir Donald Stewart, and which have been worthily rewarded by the G.C.S.I., was published in the St. James's Gazette the other day. We are glad to see the announcement of his return home, and of his having taken his seat as a Member of the Council of India.

It has been rumoured that Major-General Thomas Elliott Hughes, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, would be appointed an Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India in succession to Lieutenant-General Thomas Fourness Wilson, C.B., C.I.E. We now learn that the Queen has been pleased to approve the appointment.

CONSIDERABLE uneasiness is manifested at Pekin in consequence of the intrigues of Russian agents engaged in exciting discontent among the Mahomedan population in Kuldja, and the Tsung-li-Yamen is said to have addressed a strong remonstrance to the Russian Minister here on the subject.

RICHARD WAGNER was nothing if not peculiar. It seems that his stepfather wanted to make him a painter; but the boy was very awkward at drawing. He says, "I had learned to play 'Ueb immer Treu und Redlichkeit,' and the 'Jungfernkranz' (Freischütz), which was then quite new. The day before his death (September 30, 1821), I had to play these to him in an adjoining room, and I heard him faintly saying to my mother, 'Do you think he might have a gift for music.'" "At the age of fourteen," we are further told, "Wagner secretly began to write a grand tragedy. It was made up of Hamlet and Lear, forty-two men died in the course of it, and some of them had to return as ghosts to keep the fifth act going."

A CORRESPONDENT of the St. James's Gazette makes one's hair stand on end. Fancy the new Parliament being identified with "the number of the Beast!" I do not know, says he, whether it has been noticed by anyone, that when Parliament meets there will be exactly 666 members of the House of Commons to be sworn in. I think I am also correct in saying that this ominous number has turned up at least three or four times during the late elections, either in the numbers polled or in the majority obtained by one candidate over another. Ingenious minds have endeavoured to show that the letters composing the late Prime Minister's name make up the fatal number. Whatever opinion may be entertained of these attempts, I challenge anybody to contradict my statement as to the "number" of the new House; and I think it must be obvious that it has "the mark of the beast" upon it—that is to say, of the three-acre cow!

A LAWYER's little daughter goes to school, and is in a class with other little girls. The teacher was going over the good old story of King Solomon and his wisdom. "Now, dears, who was the great queen who travelled so many miles to see this king?" Silence prevailed. The name had been forgotten by the class. In order to help them, the kind, but misguided, teacher, began to offer a little assistance. "You do know, I am sure. The name begins with 'S,' and she was a very great queen." Just then up shot a little hand, and outspoke the triumphant voice of the little girl. She transfixed the listening schoolroom with the following brief statement in a clear, business-like voice, "I know, teacher; it was the Queen of Spades."

A GRIFF wants to know what is the best covering for the head. Hair isn't bad.

SOME years ago a gentleman at Windsor took the place of the organist, with a view to show his superiority in execution. Among other pieces he was playing one of Dr. Blow's anthems, and just as he had finished the verse part, and began the full chorus, the organ ceased. On this he called to Dick, the bellows-blower, to know what was the matter:—"The matter," says Dick, "I have played the anthem below." "Aye," says the other, "but I have not played it above." "No matter," quoth Dick, "you might have made more haste then; I know how many puffs go to one of Dr. Blow's anthems as well as you do; I have not played the organ so many years for nothing."

"THERE are good and bad points about this coffee," said the boarder in a judicial tone; "the good point is that there is no chicory in it; the bad that there is no coffee in it."

Nor much better is the report given below about tea:—Some few years ago 39,000,000lbs. of tea were manufactured in China, of which 95,000,000lbs. were exported to England alone.

It was recently decided in the law courts that a blind man cannot be made liable for a bill payable at sight. In consequence of this we hear that the Calcutta firms are each arranging to take in a blind man as partner, upon whom drafts are to be drawn at sight by their mofussil creditors. Any blind man seeing this paragraph may make what use he likes of it.

WE remember hearing of a missionary—a most worthy man, too—who once had to address a Sunday-school in support of his mission. He told them the usual stories of heathen children, and kept talking at the restless little ones for over two hours. At last he said, "And now, my dear children, I have told you all about those poor heathen children and now what more can I say." A bright-eyed little girl eagerly called out, "Please, mister, say Amen!"

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

REMINISCENCES OF SPORT IN INDIA.*

"In the present volume the author advances no claim to anything but a plain record of such things, especially in Indian sport, as have been met with during a long but uneventful service of upwards of forty years in the East." Such is General Burton's description of his book, and a true one it is, except in one respect. The General may not often have had occasion to try conclusions with his own kind, but uneventful his career has not been, as many an encounter with "the beasts that perish," narrated in this interesting volume, will testify. Some dozen hair-breadth escapes, whether on the field of battle, or on that of sport, may fairly be held to constitute "events" enough for the life of any one man. We shall not deprive our readers of legitimate enjoyment by attempting to eviscerate the book. They must peruse it for themselves. A few extracts will give an idea of its general scope.

Our author is evidently an enthusiastic shikarree, and, as such, thinks himself entitled to "pot all creation"—except, of course, foxes. "I saw," says he (while sitting on the margin of a tank) "a strange commotion in the water, something like a small steam-boat coming along; it was clearly something that ought to be shot." It proved to be a python, and was duly shot accordingly. But as a python only eight feet long? The General went in for much more substantial game. Cheetas, leopards, tigers, all seem to have fallen to his almost unerring aim. He, indeed, candidly records one or two "misses," chiefly attributable to the restiveness of his "mounts." We admire his steadiness of hand, and his anxiety to put animals "out of their trouble" when mortally wounded. But we cannot think it worth recording that he brought down, at six yards distance, a tiger (p. 396), which was not charging him, but was passing "at a trot in front of the tree" where he was sitting. It savours too much of a cockney toppling over a bird on a tree.

"Who could be satirical
About a thing so very small"

A week or two back, in a few remarks on Mr. Prinsep's Statistical Report we referred to the large butcher's bill due to snake-bites, and it is by no means satisfactory to hear, on such high authority as General Burton's, that (p. 301) "there are many things which throw considerable doubt on the accuracy of the returns of death from snake-bites, and which induce the belief that an enormous amount of secret crime . . . is hidden in these returns, and that murders of women in particular, for family reasons, are of horribly frequent occurrence, and are conveniently put down to snake-bite."

As a Madras officer, and habitually perambulating the forests in search of Shikar, the author could not fail to see, more than most officials have the chance of seeing, of the Aborigines of Central and Southern India; and a fuller account of them would, we think, have been valuable. It is not altogether to our credit that we know so little of them. A description of the Yenadees of Cuddapah (p. 153) shows how little they are even aware of the existence of the Sahib logue.

"They value not money. They are much afraid of white faces. When I first came to the jungle they would not come near me, though they would accompany my shikarries out tracking. They would not, however, come close to me, and they propounded to my shikarry strange questions concerning white men; whether, for instance, 'Sahibs' did not cut up jungle people into 'mas-salah' (medicine) for their horses whenever they got a chance of doing so. The ordinary villagers, likewise, had their own doubts to satisfy. They once asked my shikarry whether his master could not stay at home if he liked. The shikarry said, 'Yes, he could.' 'Then, can he not sit down, and lie down all day, and sleep all day, if he likes, in his own house, instead of tiring himself out in these jungles?' 'Yes.' 'Does he not have his regular meals at home, at proper times, instead of living from hand to mouth, as we see he does here?' 'Yes.' 'Then why, in the name of all the gods, does he come out into this wilderness, and not stay comfortably at home? Is he mad? He must be mad!'"

The description of the sepulchres of the aborigines—or, more probably, of a race long anterior to those which we recognise under that term (p. 276)—is very suggestive. The upright stone surrounded by a circle of other stones reminds one of similar erections—if so they may be termed—in many parts of Europe, and, if we err not, in America. This very interesting field of antiquarian research has, of late years, been much explored. Yet it is not impossible, or even improbable, that the "wilderness" of Central India might furnish to an antiquary, who could place himself en rapport with the Aborigines, discoveries scarcely less wonderful than those which a chance hint or two led Stephens to make in Yucatan.

In the course of his service General Burton was for some time stationed at Secunderabad, while Sir R. Temple was the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, which he practically "made," welding them, by the exercise of a degree of tact, energy, and firmness rarely found in the same individual, into a manageable whole, the administration of which has caused his successors but little trouble or anxiety. The General was also familiar with the Nizam's dominions while Temple held the "blue ribbon" of the Indian political service as Resident at Hyderabad, and his remarks on the condition of this most important of Native States well deserve attention.

In a word, we may say that our author has kept his eyes open, has used them well, and has, consequently, produced an eminently readable book.

STUDIES IN RUSSIA.*

Mr. Augustus Hare is so well known to the public as a brilliant and attractive writer that it is no slight praise to assert that the present volume relating to Russia in no wise falls short of the high standard of excellence and attractiveness which he has taught his readers to expect. What does he tell us of this huge Empire, the Colossus of the North? First as to scenery. "No one must expect any striking beauty in Russia; it does not possess any; and except in the neighbourhood of some of the towns, which have all chosen the best situations, there is scarcely anything which can be ever called pretty. The desolation is also extreme, for no country is more thinly inhabited." Yet even this scene of unloveliness has its bright side when "the almost instantaneous change from winter to a verdant flower-laden spring of indescribable radiance and freshness" bursts upon the dreary and frozen-up land. Nor is the country less unattractive as regards the petty tyrannies of the numerous petty tyrants who, in the shape of "officials," harass and impede the traveller at every turn, exacting fees and expecting bribes for the simplest and most commonplace incidents of everyday life. The sights, too, said in many cases to be free, are just the contrary. The attendant attends only to extort money, the guide guides to naught unless his memory be refreshed. Would you make a sketch you need orders and counterorders as if you were a felon seeking to pry into the inmost secrets of the national councils, and even then you are pretty certain to be dragged for miles to some station, as the police cannot read the permit which you possess.

Certainly the prospect is not particularly inviting. "Nevertheless," writes Mr. Hare, "an English traveller, possessed of a firm intention of conquering difficulties and laughing at deficiencies and disagreeables, will find much in Russia to enjoy. It is not the country or the buildings, but the life itself which makes its picturesqueness." Let us follow our traveller in his wanderings amongst the populace, and pick up a few stray fragments of his experience.

Commencing at the top of the tree we find the Tsar, in the fullest sense, the father of his people—the idol whom they worship, the hero whom they adore; they love him with devoted tenderness, and serve him with ready obedience. To such a pitch is this feeling of veneration carried that even the objects of his cruelty will bless the hand which strikes them down, and invoke blessings on the head which consigns them to torture and death.

As regards the nobles but little need be said. They are, as a body, corrupt, venal and mercenary, indifferent alike to the wants and aspirations of their tenants, while, at the same time, meek and fawning in the presence of their Sovereign. As illustrative of this somewhat severe description one anecdote will suffice. A lady, feeling that her personal charms were on the wane, made one of her serfs her hairdresser, and shut him up for life lest he should tell what he saw!

Passing on to the people at large there is much to admire—at least in theory, if not in actual everyday life. Superstitious to a degree, the prominent characteristic of the nation is their regard for sacred pictures. Not a village but what contains some "icon" endowed with miraculous powers—not a household which cannot boast of its image which serves to keep alive the zeal of the occupants, and ward off the attack of evil spirits or malignant influences—while in the larger towns the metal pictures and crosses meet the eye at every turn, lending to the scene a quaint and peculiar charm even to a traveller in whose breast these sacred emblems give rise to no feelings of piety or devotion. It could be hoped that the religiousness of the people as practised before the eye—for a peasant will not perform the most trifling act without invoking a blessing from on High—were carried out in the everyday life of the nation, but it is far otherwise. The people are deceitful, mercenary, and double-dealing to such an extent that the Emperor Nicholas was wont to say that there was but one honest man in the land—himself. That these vices are characteristics of the country is indicated by the circumstance that society has no punishment for detected falsehood or discovered fraud. No one is hypocrite enough to blame another for a vice which he himself is only too prone to commit. Even the very sanctity of the churches will not protect the pious devotee from the thievish propensities of a neighbouring worshipper, who consoles his conscience by offering to an "icon" a portion of the proceeds of a robbery which the image, were it a tutelary deity, should have been potent to prevent. If to this somewhat repellent description it be added that amongst the lower orders intemperance—"vodki drinking"—is carried to an excess which brutalises the masses who indulge in this pernicious vice it may well be doubted whether Russia is entitled to pioneer the way as civilisers of the earth. There is surely much to be done at home ere attempts be made in foreign climes to improve mankind at large. But we forbear. We take off our shoes—the ground whereon we stand is holy ground, and we fall down prostrate before the Icon of Holy Russia.

SIR A. P. PHAYRE, G.C.M.G., K.C.S.I., C.B.

The sudden death of Sir Arthur Purves Phayre, which occurred on the 15th, has rapidly followed the decease of another soldier-statesman, Sir W. Coghlan. Born in 1812, and joining the Bengal Army at the age of sixteen, Phayre first made his mark on being appointed to the charge of Arracan, then recently conquered from the Burmese. All who had the privilege of his acquaintance, and could see how warm and sympathetic a heart was concealed under an apparently most impassive demeanour, will readily understand that he was no sooner known than liked, and how naturally it came to him to earn the sobriquet of the "Just Judge." What Henry and John Lawrence were to the Punjab, he was to British Burma, of which, soon after its conquest in 1852, he became the first Chief Commissioner, and where his work, though less "showy," being performed in an outlying province, was not less meritorious, than that done in a more prominent sphere by the better-known brothers. Phayre "made" British Burma; and it is not too much to say of him that "to speak of Burma is to speak of Sir Arthur Phayre." At first decidedly opposed to intervention in Upper Burma, which he had repeatedly visited, and with which no one was better acquainted than himself, he found himself, within the last few months, compelled to admit its necessity, and the expedition, now happily terminated, had his full consent and his best wishes. As his friend, Sir John Kaye, wrote, he "is entitled to a place in the very foremost rank of those English administrators who have striven to make our rule a blessing to the people of India, and have not failed in the attempt."

MEETINGS OF LEARNED AND OTHER SOCIETIES.

Lectures on Oriental topics have been very much "to the fore" during the week which has elapsed since our last issue. On Wednesday both Mr. Colquhoun and Mr. Holt Hallett, the former at the United Service Institution, the latter at the Society of Arts, referred to the new position in which our occupation of Burma had placed us relatively to the Chinese; Mr. Colquhoun laying especial stress on the extreme importance of cultivating particularly friendly relations with them, in order the better to arrest the steady and insidious approaches of Russia, bent as she is on the annihilation of British trade in the East, and threatening alike, as she does, both the Chinese, and our own Indian, Empire. Both lectures, the former especially, were delivered before influential audiences, and there was a general consensus of opinion as to the soundness of the views advocated.

Under the auspices of the National Indian Association, Dr. Cullimore, the late Residency Surgeon at Mandalay, gave, last Thursday, a vivid and picturesque account of Burma. Most medical men have, if not an innate, a readily acquired, power of observation, and the outcome of this was conspicuously perceptible in the lecturer's remarks, which the Association would do well to publish in their excellent Journal. Burma is not, in our judgment, so wholly dissociated from India as to be outside the scope of the beneficent work of the Association.

On December 16th an influential and numerous-attended meeting of gentlemen interested in the East Indian and China trades was held at the London Chamber of Commerce, under the presidency of Mr. H. M. Matheson, "for the purpose of forming a Trade Section and Committee, in connection with the Chamber, to directly represent the large trading, commercial, and shipping interests in the East Indies, Burma, the Strait Settlements, Hong Kong, the Indo-Chinese peninsula, Japan, and China generally." A resolution in accordance with the objects of the meeting was unanimously adopted, and a strong and influential working committee formed.

A new explanation of the Union Jack is "wrote sarcastical" by the Naval and Military Gazette. The red for the Army, the blue for the Navy, and the white for the paper Army and Navy!

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1885.

INDIA IN THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

THE elections having now been brought to a termination, we can cast up our losses and our gains as regards the would-be representatives of Indian interests. The chief of these candidates for Parliamentary honours were:—Lord Randolph Churchill (Mid-Birmingham and South Paddington), Mr. L. McIvor (Torquay), Sir J. B. Phear (East Devonshire), Sir H. Havelock-Allan (South-East Durham), Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose (Deptford Division of Greenwich), Sir James Fergusson (North-East Division of Manchester), Mr. J. M. Maclean (Oldham), Sir Roper Lethbridge (North Kensington), Sir Lewis Pelly (North Hackney), Sir Guyer Hunter (Central Hackney), Mr. J. D. Mayne (North-East Division of Bethnal-green), Mr. W. Digby (North Paddington), Mr. A. R. Scoble (Newcastle-under-Lyme), Mr. Wilfrid Blunt (North Camberwell), Mr. J. Seymour Keay (West Newington), Sir Richard Temple (South Worcestershire), Mr. D. Pugh (East Caermarthenshire), Sir G. Campbell (Kirkcaldy), Mr. D. Macfarlane (Argyleshire), and Sir George Balfour (Kincardineshire). To these should be added the name of Lord G. Hamilton, not so long since the popular and energetic Under Secretary of State for India. A fairly representative list this. As the Times of India remarked, some time since:—

We find amongst these aspirants for Parliamentary honours men of every shade of opinion, and of every important class of which society in this country is composed. There are optimists and pessimists, retired officials and non-officials, practising Anglo-Indian barristers, retired Anglo-Indian journalists, and last, but far from least in the opinion of many, a pure, unadulterated Indian. As far as India is concerned, a more representative body of men could scarcely have been got together, and in point of ability they do credit to the country.

Unfortunately, the constituencies have not, on the whole, shown themselves appreciative of the merits of these gentlemen. We advisedly use the word unfortunately, because we desire that every shade of opinion should have its spokesman in the House of Commons. Though not very many were called, few indeed have been chosen. The last list shows that only the following have been successful. Though we indicate the sides which, in English politics, they may, respectively, be expected severally to take, we sincerely trust that they may consider themselves in duty bound to disregard, as to Indian matters, all but the true interests of our grand Indian dependency, and to insist (they can, if so minded) on an adequate attendance when the Indian Budget is under discussion.

The following have been returned:—

Lord Randolph Churchill.	Sir H. Havelock-Allan.
Lord George Hamilton.	Sir George Balfour.
Sir James Fergusson.	Sir George Campbell.
Sir Richard Temple.	Mr. L. McIvor.
Sir R. Lethbridge.	Mr. D. Pugh.
Sir Guyer Hunter.	Mr. D. H. Macfarlane.
Sir Lewis Pelly.
Mr. J. M. McLean.

Among the rejected candidates, Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose is the only one whose failure will attract notice. We do not profess to regret it, for we believe that, as Lord R. Churchill said of the Indian "delegates," he no more represents India than he represents Kamtschatka. Those even who most desire the presence in Parliament of Natives, will admit the all-but impossibility of finding a really representative man of the first class—such a man, for instance, as Sir Dinkur Rao, or Sir T. Madhava Rao—who would be willing to abandon his certain position of pre-eminent usefulness at home, to present himself night after night to a mixed audience, consisting in large part of potshop politicians, and persons of the rougher class, who would judge his candidature solely from the standpoint of his English politics, on the outside chance of obtaining a seat in an assembly where not one night in fifty is, except in cases of unusual political excitement, devoted to Indian subjects.

In matters Colonial, your Frenchman generally holds up, as it were, a beacon to show you what to avoid; and we need not ask to be told what sort of representatives the French colonies return to the Paris Chambre des Députés. There is, perhaps, no more difficult problem connected with what is called Imperial Federation than the question how to obtain a valid, yet not an excessive, representation of Colonial interests in the British Senate. The riddle will in time be solved; yet neither easily nor quickly, though the Colonies possess, in the main, a British population. In India, where Europeans are relatively so few, where the minds of most Native gentlemen would be bornés, by provincial (or even local) prejudice, to an extent which would incapacitate them from "representing" anything but, at the outside, a few hundred square miles, and where it would be difficult to procure the services of the very few statesmen who could really represent the entire Peninsula, the difficulty is tenfold greater. That Government nominees on a Legislative Council do not really express, if, indeed, even for their own districts, average Native opinion is notorious.

Whether the problem is to be solved by the admission of really representative (not "delegate") Native gentlemen to the Council of India, or in what other way, we need not at present stop to inquire. But the fact should be recognised, that its solution is daily becoming more pressing, more imperative. Were the promised investigation into Indian matters to do no more than find a means of securing for India an organ capable of personally advocating its interests, even if only in matters vitally affecting them, it will not have been held in vain.

SIR THOMAS SYMONDS ON THE NAVY.

WE reproduce with pleasure—should we not rather say with pain?—a few words from Sir Thomas Symond's address to the electors of the country generally. When the "only other General" finds it necessary, in two successive speeches at the Mansion House, to remark on the condition of the Army, when the Admiral chosen (notwithstanding his well-known political opinions) by a Radical Government as the best man to command an experimental squadron, tells us, that we have "ships without speed, guns without range, and boilers with but a few months' life in them;" when cartridges "jam," and swords and bayonets crumple up like pewter instead of going through an enemy as if he were a sheet of brown paper, it is hard to resist the conclusion that the Services have been systematically starved, and are, indeed, "in a bad way." And, if this be so, in what sort of a "way" is the defence of the country? Sir Thomas says:—

My earnest desire to call the attention of my countrymen at the coming election to the present state of the navy, as compared with that of France, may, I trust, justify my request that you will publish what follows. Englishmen would do well to consider that half their food is brought to us in ships, and that they depend on the navy for everything. It behoves electors to inquire into its state, and insist on its being kept up to the mark at whatever cost. Cobden proposed £100,000,000 to insure superiority over France. Most can remember the cotton famine during the American Civil War. That was awful enough; but imagine a food famine! Our wise forefathers kept up a navy double the French, superior to all Europe, so that our coasts and everything were safe. Our seamen were also superior to others; our food grown at home. These advantages made us careless, so our coasts, &c. are utterly undefended. Those of France are thoroughly fortified. Where they already talk of their attacks on our wealth and undefended places, "to burn, destroy, and pitilessly ransom them." Steam renders such attacks of the easiest. John Bull's riches are the wonder of the world, and excite corresponding cupidity. Still he sleeps, and leaves them utterly undefended. Let him remember the French ransom in 1870. What would not ours be? Politicians have led to this by persistently starving the navy for twenty-five years. In 1860 eleven millions was the navy effective vote, when an ironclad cost £300,000, the personnel 85,000 men. Since then nine millions has been the effective vote, armour clads costing £800,000, personnel now 58,000 in number; although France has increased her vote two millions in 1883, and personnel 7,000 men since 1870. So that the navy is now quite starved, and so barely equal to France as to leave all in peril—people's food, trade, &c. Besides, the French ships are more powerfully armoured and better armed. If she was defeated at sea France would continue the same powerful and wonderful country, with 3,750,000 soldiers. Her commercial wants could be supplied by neutrals and her neighbour's railways. Without any fleet she would be prosperous. How stands the case with us? A naval defeat means famine, pestilence, annihilation.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

Sir W. Andrew has addressed the following communication on the Euphrates Valley Railway to the Editor of the Times:—

Sir,—The movements which have recently taken place in the East, and the still more formidable ones which seem to be imminent, have excited the deepest attention, not only of thoughtful Englishmen, but in various countries in Europe as well as in America; and there appears to be a general desire to know what steps, if any, are being taken to connect the Mediterranean Sea with the head of the Persian Gulf along the Euphrates route, and so re-open the ancient highway of nations between the East and West.

The example of Russia's persevering energy in establishing her Eastern communications should not be lost upon us, for she advances boldly, regardless of cost, or any other obstruction, knowing well that the additional prestige which she will thereby gain, not only in the East, but in Europe also, will amply repay her for any sacrifice.

Field-Marshal Lieutenant Baron Kuhn von Kuhnfeld, Austrian War Minister, so long ago as 1858, considered the Euphrates Valley line the best means of counteracting the advance of any European Power towards India, and as of more importance than the Suez Canal, which it directly covers.

The general features of the projected Euphrates Valley Railway may be thus briefly summed up:—

1. It would connect the Mediterranean with the head of the Persian Gulf, between which and Kurrachee and Bombay regular communication is now maintained by a line of powerful steamers subsidised by the Indian Government.

2. Making Kurrachee the European port of India instead of Bombay, it would save about 1,000 miles in the distance between England and India; and by the substitution of railway for boat transit would reduce the time occupied in the journey by one-half—i.e., to ten days instead of twenty days.

3. It would render it possible to maintain India with a smaller European garrison than is now necessary, and would thus reduce our military expenditure.

4. It would save the Government large sums in sudden emergencies by the facilities it would afford—and that at all seasons of the year—for the transport of troops and stores.

5. It would enable troops from England to be landed at Kurrachee in about fourteen days, and in two or three more to reach Quetta, Peshawur, or Delhi, virtually making Chatham or Southampton the basis of our operations instead of Bombay or Kurrachee.

6. It would subject an enemy advancing towards the North-Western Frontier of India to easy attack in the flank and rear, and would render the invasion of India all but impossible.

7. Combined with the Indus line, with its branches to the Bolan and the Khyber, it would appear to make the position of India impregnable.

8. It would make the power of England so immediately felt in the East that any hostile movement directed against us, whether from within or without our Indian frontier, might thus be effectually checked before it could assume formidable proportions.

9. It would give our extensive military establishments in India a direct influence in support of our power and prestige in Europe.

10. It would give England the first strategical position in the world for defence, not for aggression.

11. It would facilitate the protection of Asia Minor by England.

12. It would relieve Persia from the predominating influence of Russia, by giving her access to a port on the Mediterranean.

13. It would be easily defensible, both of its termini being on the open sea, the resources of England being promptly available on one side and those of India on the other.

14. It would be protected on the flank most likely to be assailed by two formidable rivers, the Euphrates and the Tigris; while the possession of Cyprus by England gives us an admirable place d'armes for covering the terminus of the railway at Alexandretta or Seleucia.

15. The length of the railway, from Alexandretta, on the Mediterranean, to Grain, on the Persian Gulf, would be about 920 miles.

16. The country is admirably adapted for the construction of a railway, and the cost of the line is estimated at from £5,000 to £6,000 per mile.

17. The capital which would be required would thus be under £6,000,000.

These views I have advocated for many years, in conjunction with General Chesney, the explorer of the route, and his surviving officers, Admiral Charlewood and Mr. W. F. Ainsworth, powerfully aided by the distinguished engineer, the late Sir John Macneill, who, with his son, Mr. Telford Macneill, and a staff, surveyed and reported on the most important portion of the route as easy of accomplishment. The plan has been concurred in by Musurus Pasha on behalf of the Turkish Government, by the late Mr. Brassey, Lord Strathnairn, the late Sir Bartle Frere, and by the "great Elchi," the venerated Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, and it was adopted in the report by the Special Committee of the House of Commons in 1872, of which Sir Stafford Northcote (now Lord Iddesleigh) was chairman, and recommended, both on strategic and commercial grounds, to the favourable consideration of Government.

In 1883 Lord Salisbury, in his place in the House of Peers, said:—

"The popularity of the scheme and the great attention given to it are only some of the many signs which should make Her Majesty's Government consider that the subject of connecting the Indian Ocean and the Mediterranean is one of the most important questions of the day. . . . It is, therefore, a matter for which Her Majesty's Government will be held largely responsible by the public if they do not adopt, at an early period, a definite policy on the question—a policy to which they are prepared to adhere, and one which will respond to the feelings entertained by the public of this country."

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

W. P. ANDREW.

29, Bryanston-square, W., Dec. 14.

It is stated that the members of the Madura Mission have at last decided to admit polygamists to baptism, provided they contracted their marriages in ignorance, and there seems no equitable way of securing a separation. A convert New Zealander beautifully solved the problem in his own case by eating up one of his wives. Could no such way be resorted to in India?

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1885.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 11th Dec.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 9th Dec.

FROM the telegrams of the Times' Correspondent at Calcutta, dated 27th, it would seem that Mr. Bernard is making good progress in restoring order at Mandalay and in pacifying the adjoining districts by clearing them of Dacoits. He has wisely dispensed with the services of the Tynedah Mengyee, and it is thought probable that evidence may be forthcoming to connect this ruffian with recent outrages at the capital and elsewhere. The question of annexation is still undecided; it is a very great error not to have, in the first instance, settled what was to be the future of the country. On this point we reproduce the words of the telegram:—

The delay in announcing the policy of the Government regarding the future status of Upper Burma may be unavoidable, but it is much to be regretted, and many ardent advocates of annexation consider that even a decision adverse to their views would be preferable to the present state of uncertainty. The members of the Anglo-Indian community, as I have frequently mentioned, are all but unanimous in holding that annexation is not only the best but the only safe solution of the problem. It is understood that Sir C. Aitchison, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, a former Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and Mr. Bernard, the present Chief Commissioner, are the only high authorities who favour the adoption of an opposite course. It is known that recent events in Upper Burma have gone far to modify Mr. Bernard's views on the subject of interference, and it is quite possible that his visit to Mandalay may have a further modifying effect.

SOME time ago we pointed out the great and important change in our relations with China which our presence in Upper Burma could not fail to bring about. We can hardly be surprised to hear that China, like some mushroom States in Southern Europe, desires "territorial compensation" for her future neighbour's territorial gains. Why should she not have it? "Sous condition," however, of doing her share in opening up efficient communication between her present provinces and that which she wishes to acquire. We read, still under Sunday's date, from Calcutta:—

The rumour that China, in the event of annexation, will demand a slice of territory extending to Bhamo, causes no anxiety here. On the contrary, it is very generally felt that to comply with such a demand, if made, would be a politic and prudent course on our part, as it would tend to develop a large trade with Western China, and to establish intimate relations with a Power which is our natural ally in the East, besides saving the expense and trouble of keeping the Kachyens and other frontier tribes in order. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Ministry and Lord Dufferin will not lose the present most favourable opportunity, and that the next few days may witness a formal annexation, if not of the whole kingdom, at least of so much as extends to Bhamo.

WE have received the following telegram from the India Office:—

"From Viceroy, Calcutta, Dec. 25.

"Following from Rangoon to-day:—

"Suppression of British Burmah dacoits is proceeding satisfactorily. Troops and police have driven them from Shwegyin, Myitkho, Sittang, and Wimpadaw, inflicting considerable loss and taking about 70 prisoners.

"Dacoits are very badly armed and give little trouble when met. We have lost one villager killed and a few men slightly wounded.

"Some dacoity in Syriam division, which is being promptly suppressed. Force here believed to be ample for all requirements. Telegraph communication with Shwegyin has been restored."

FROM Bhamo there is, owing to the strict Press censorship established by General Prendergast, and of which the Times' Correspondent complains, little news.

THERE has long been some talk of uniting Calcutta and its suburbs under one Municipality; but a committee appointed to consider the subject desire to restrict the municipal jurisdiction to a portion of the suburbs only. Probably a larger measure will be submitted to the Legislative Council.

THE final reports on the inundations in Bengal show that less than two lakhs were actually required for relief purposes. The Government say in a late Resolution:—

No permanent injury whatever has been caused by the recent floods. On the contrary, although there have been much discomfort and a great loss of personal property, there has been no loss of life or considerable loss of cattle, while the coming harvests will be, according to the universal promise, of such abundance as to more than compensate for the loss of movable property that has occurred. The districts affected by the floods have everywhere shown great recuperative powers.

The Naval and Military Gazette has reason to think that the present Commander-in-Chief in India and Lord Dufferin are in accord as to the possibility of remodelling and reorganising the armies of Native States. By making the total of each army depend upon population and revenue, and by including these forces as a portion of our Indian Army, partly commanded by English officers, it is believed that the susceptibilities of the feudatory rulers would be flattered instead of assailed. The troops as at present constituted are little better than a rabble of mercenaries, but under English officers and English discipline a change would soon be brought about.

It is, says the United Service Gazette, reported in political circles in St. Petersburg that the three military chiefs in Central Asia—Prince Dondoukoff Korsakoff, Governor of the Caucasus; General Rosenbach, Governor of Turkestan; and General Kolpakoffski, Governor of the Steppes—have been ordered to deliberate upon the measures which it may be necessary to adopt in case of warlike complications with England in Asia.

OUR contemporary, the Times of India, rightly called attention to the fever-stricken state of the little garrison (one officer and fifty men) at the Nicobar Islands. But, admitting the difficulty, we cannot see our way to concurring with the Times of India as to the practical abandonment of the islands, which, in the hands of any other Power, would be a terrible thorn in our side. Other Powers would not hesitate to throw away both men and money to make them so. At even some cost let us, in these days of "exploitation" of unoccupied islands, keep the Union Jack flying.

WE see it stated in the Delhi Gazette that, in the opinion of the engineer-in-chief, it would be quite practicable, at the cost of half-a-mile's extra tunnelling, to have a broad-gauge railway through the Bolan Pass. We think this clearly a thing to be done.

WE are glad to read in the Pioneer that the normal growth of revenue and a partial revival of commercial prosperity have done something towards enabling the country to meet the new strain on its resources without an immediate resort to taxation. It is satisfactory to know that the improvement in railways has been well sustained through the late months of the year. From April 1st up to October 17th, the gross receipts of "Guaranteed and State Railways" had improved by nearly 95 lakhs, and the net earnings by 34 lakhs. The receipts of "Assisted Companies" were larger by 13½ lakhs, towards which the Rohilkund and Kumaon contributed 1½ lakhs, Southern Mahratta 4 lakhs, Bengal and North-Western 6½, and Tarkessur 1½ lakhs.

THE Naval and Military Gazette says that the arrangements by the War Office for augmenting the British forces in India by 10,000 men, as required by the Indian Government, are now almost completed. The first draft for this service will leave England in the hired transport Hankow on January 2nd. The hired transport India will leave England on January 19th with another contingent. The Deccan will follow on the next day with additional troops from England, and other vessels, yet to be chartered, will take out further reinforcements on February 2nd and in the second week of March. Each ship will convey about 1,000 men.

THE Broad Arrow said the other day :—

The defenceless state of British interests in the Red Sea, between Perim and Aden, has, we understand, been brought under the notice of Lord Salisbury; and it is believed the matter will receive much needed attention. For some time past the British Government has been singularly lax in its duty to the Empire in these waters. The subject has been more than once brought under its notice by officers of rank and travellers of distinction. The number of our ships-of-war at the foot of the Red Sea are in inverse ratio to that of the vessels belonging to France, Italy, Germany, or Russia.

WE are inclined to agree with our contemporary, the Army and Navy Gazette, that the invasion of British Burma by the Shans, under the leadership of a Buddhist priest, is a very unpleasant incident, as an outcome of our recent operations, and our relations with these people will need very dexterous management, or our chances of a good understanding with China may be compromised. One may, however, feel that in this, as in other matters, Lord Dufferin's discretion may well be trusted. But he can only work with the machinery at his command, and at present the Peking Embassy is vacant, the newly-appointed Ambassador being, at the present critical moment, here, instead of at his post, whither no time should be lost in despatching him.

THE London correspondent of the Rast Goftar says that a movement is being made by a Native of India to induce some English ladies residing in London to put themselves in constant communication with the educated Native ladies of India by way of promoting their social advancement. There are, we know, quite a number of old ladies and young ones too, in London, who have very little to do besides letter-writing, and probably a few of these may be engaged in the interests of the educated Native ladies of India.

WE take the following personal details as to the late Minister of Nepal from a Service contemporary :—

Runodeep Sing, the brother of Sir Jung Bahadoor, and his successor as Prime Minister and virtual ruler, as guardian of the Nepalese Maharajah of the kingdom, was very favourably disposed towards the Indian Government, and relaxed in our interests the stringent regulations against the Goorkhas entering our Service, which caused the recruiting for the regiments we have of them to be very like smuggling. He was an odd squat man of a Chinese or Calmuck type, as many Nepalese are, and he affected British uniforms and military practices, so that one might see a scarlet tunic blazing with lace and gold-striped trousers worn with a Nepalese turban and slippers on his person, inspecting a line of Nepalese infantry, dressed like Sepoys minus the characteristic head-dress. Whilst Jung lived Runodeep was nowhere—or wherever he was, was in abject terror. The poor General apparently had little time to make a fight for his life when his enviable nephews attacked him,—and note that in Nepal uncles are as deadly to nephews as the Duke of Gloster himself, or as the typical bad one in "The Babes in the Wood,"—so that it is not to be wondered at if nephews are now and then avuncularicides. But there may be more serious consequences arising out of this revolt than crop up to the sight at once, and Lord Dufferin certainly will think once, twice, or thrice before he rounds off our scientific frontier by annexing Nepal and establishing another line of frontier continuous with China. It is quite certain the Nepalese will try all they know to keep us out of their country, which has not much to recommend it except as a happy hunting-ground.

THE Indian Tea Gazette remarks on the failure of the Dutch "to make a good thing" of Java, which, by the way, we ought never to have given them back, its position and fertility being unrivalled. "In matters of commerce," as was long since said, "the fault of the Dutch, while giving too little, is asking too much." "It would seem that in Java they are as exacting in matters fiscal as in matters commercial. We read :—

It seems strange that the Dutch, who have the reputation of being such good colonists, are making a sad mess of things in the "spicy isle." Excessive taxation is ruining agricultural and commercial interests there, now, however, to a serious extent. The tea industry of Java was capable of considerable expansion, but heavy dues have crippled its progress seriously, and in many cases cultivation is being abandoned as being no longer profitable. Otherwise there is nothing to prevent Java proving a formidable rival to the Ceylon article. In existing circumstances, however, this seems hardly likely to happen.

ELSEWHERE we print from the Engineer an account of the Sukkur Rohri bridge, which is, for railway purposes, to connect the Cis and Trans-Indus railway systems, and is a work of the first importance.

Chit Chat.

WE think we have rarely seen a neater joke, not even in Sergeant Ballantine's Memoirs, than this :—Mr. Justice Hawkins, when a leader at the Bar, appeared in a shipping case before the late Baron Channell, who was a little shaky with his aspirates. The name of the vessel about which the dispute had arisen was Hannah, but Sir Henry's "Junior," in utter desperation, said to him : "Is this ship the Anna or the Hannah, for his lordship says one thing, and every one else says another?" "The ship," said Sir Henry, in reply, "was named the Hannah, but the H has been lost in the chops of the Channel?"

THERE are few things which have not been proved to have been the end and object of the game of chess; but to educe radicalism from it has been reserved for the nineteenth century. May we remark, en passant, that bishops were a species unknown to the Orient at the time when the grand game was invented. In Mr. Murray's book, "Rainbow Gold," the canny Armstrong is made to say :—"The game was intended to be a satire upon royalty, and an exposition of the natures and capacities of men. Observe the king. There's no game without him. He's essential, but he's useless, and if that's a contradiction in tairms, Job, ye must blame the man that invented the game, and not me that describe it. The poor big creature's just able to lift a foot at a time. The common people bleed for him. The church, in the person of the bishop, runs sideways for him. Do ye mark how the bishop's course, from his own point o' view, is straightforward? He sticks to his own straight line, but the man that has the board before 'm sees the crab-like course he takes. The knight was oreiginally a casuist or a lawyer. The castle was the military man, a downright fellow, with no subteelties. Then, the game's a proclamation of the eternal verities of the gynecocracy—petticoat government. The lady rules everything. The game's republican as well. The humblest pawn has only to go on his straightforward course to be a bishop or a baron, or to become transmogrified into royalty."

A PARTY of pilgrims, who left Ceylon about nine months ago, have returned to Colombo from their pilgrimage, and have been received by a large number of their Mahommedan brethren. Their tour has caused a little excitement among the local Mahommedan community, and doubtless they are objects of wonder to their less fortunate co-religionists, whose sentiments are expressed in the following lines on the invitation card to the grand entertainment in the form of a dinner which will be shortly given in their honour :—Hajaj from Prophet's sacred land; From Mecca's shrine, Medina's tomb; With Turkey's praise and Alla's blessings; Thrice welcome back to Lanka's strand; As true pilgrims and Mussulmen.

EASTER will fall exceptionally late next year—on April 25th. The last time it so fell is said to have been in 1736, and the next time will be in 1943.

AN extraordinary match of lawn-tennis is reported from Australia. The ladies challenged the gentlemen, and the latter won easily. The ladies, much enraged, averred that they had been handicapped by their costumes. Accordingly another match was arranged, wherein the gentlemen had to play in stays, skirts, and dress-improvers! Strange to say, the gentlemen won again. Probably the ladies were in such fits of laughter at the strange appearance of their tyrants that they could hardly hold their racquets.

WHO would not be an Antipodean? New Zealand is indeed favoured. Mr. Sala writes thus enthusiastically of the quality of the Auckland natives :—From personal experience I can vouch for the respectable dimensions, firm texture, and delicious taste of the Auckland oysters, of which, for sixpence, you may obtain sufficient to elevate to the seventh heaven of sybaritism an amateur of oysters, who, driven to despair at having to pay three-shillings-and-sixpence a dozen for natives, had emigrated to the antipodes, not to invest in sheep or cattle runs, to dabble in grain, to speculate in land, or to gain experience—and lose money—in gold mining, but to seek for molluscs plentiful, excellent, and cheap. The cray fish likewise swarm, and are as fine in flavour as they are at Trieste, which is saying much.

MAN is called the lord of creation, but this is a misnomer. In boyhood he is tied to a woman's apron strings; in early manhood he bows down and worships a girl, and in maturity he is ruled by a baby in long clothes and indiarubber lungs. From the cradle to the grave he is a slave, and the older he grows the more insignificant his master, as a rule.

WE all know that naughty French children were long ago threatened with the immediate advent of the terrible Malbrook, whose place as a scarecrow was eventually taken by the Duke of Wellington. After the accident of Waterloo, nurses administered the following doggerel, as a quieting powder to infant France, the hero being the Iron Duke:—

"Tall he is, as a Rouen steeple,
And his teeth like iron saws,
Breakfasts, dines, on naughty people,
Crunches babies in his jaws."

Will the only General be thus honoured in Egypt, or Prendergast in Burma?

DEAR SELIM.—Here's a "goak" and a wrinkle in cookery. I can personally testify to the recipe being a good one. A lady who recently got a butler from Bombay asked me the other evening if I had noticed anything strange lately in the cooking. To which I try to believe I said, "each dinner seems nicer than the previous one." "Well," she replied, "when this butler came I told him to always have a little 'Tarragon vinegar' put in the various dishes, and on going to my 'godown' this morning and seeing a bottle which contained 'Tarragon' intact, I asked him what bottle he had been using from, when to my horror he promptly produced a 'toilette vinegar' bottle, EMPTY!"

SOME years ago a gentleman at Windsor took the place of the organist, with a view to show his superiority in execution. Among other pieces he was playing one of Dr. Blow's anthems, and just as he had finished the verse part, and began the full chorus, the organ ceased. On this he called to Dick, the bellows-blower, to know what was the matter:—"The mitter," says Dick, "I have played the anthem below." "Aye," says the other, "but I have not played it above." "No matter," quoth Dick, "you might have made more haste then; I know how many puffs go to one of Dr. Blow's anthems as well as you do; I have not played the organ so many years for nothing."

DOCTOR (about to settle down in a quiet country practice): "Yes, I think I shall do here, Mrs. Murphy. I make children my especial study, and I see the death-rate is very high amongst the young down here. Now, why should more people die young?" Mrs. Murphy: "Shure an' meself don't know if it isn't that more people are born young."

A CERTAIN nabob was on a visit to the British Resident. This European officer was naturally anxious to please and interest his Native visitor. He therefore took the nabob round the drawing-room, and showed him picture after picture hung on the walls. "This is a beautiful picture," said the Resident, and the nabob blandly responded with a "Yes." This process was repeated several times until both the nabob and the Resident came to a picture representing a steamer in motion with a line of white smoke behind the chimney. This last-mentioned feature seemed to interest the nabob in a special manner. The Resident was glad of this, and inquired, "Nabob Sahab! What do you think of this picture?" The nabob burst into exclamations of admiration. "Bahoot Acha! Bahoot Acha!" He was loud in protesting that he had never before seen anything of the sort. "Bahoot Acha! Bahoot Acha!" This was followed by a little further development of the nabob's admiration. After contemplating the picture once more, the nabob politely inquired, "Resident Sahab, what horse is this? It must be an English horse, for Arab horses never have such long white tails. Bahoot Acha! Bahoot Acha!" The Resident was convulsed with confusion and laughter, and shortly after the nabob took leave of the Resident, and retired with congenial dignity and composure, all the while thinking of going home and writing to the Resident to procure him an English horse of such long white tail!

A LOCOMOTIVE driver who can point to forty years of uninterrupted service without a single accident is not a man to be met with every day. Such a one is a Saxon engine-driver of the name of Henze who has just gone into retirement. During his forty years of railway riding Henze has travelled a distance of 253,347 geographical miles, or 1,900,102 kilometres—in other words, a distance equal to forty-seven journeys round the earth. Germany is admittedly by far the safest country for railway travelling—perhaps one of the slowest as well—but the performance of this veteran of the line is all the same a remarkable one.

OBITUARY.

"THE death," says the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, "of Colonel T. R. Davidson, Assistant Adjutant-General, Meerut, and formerly Commandant of the 18th Bengal Cavalry, will be widely regretted. He was a dashing cavalry officer and a thoroughly efficient commandant; and he had friends everywhere in the Punjab and Upper India. Joining the 18th Bengal Cavalry in 1860, he was appointed, when still a Captain, to the command of the Regiment in 1876; and was comparatively a young man when the new rule deprived him of an appointment which he was eminently qualified to hold for many years to come. Colonel Davidson had been on active service in the Mutinies, in Afghanistan, and in the Mahsud Waziri country; and there seemed good reason to hope that the next war in Asia would give him a further opportunity of winning distinction."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MADAGASCAR AND FRANCE.*

It would be difficult to estimate, or to over-estimate, what the world owes to Missionaries. There is scarcely a country in the world in which they have not been the pioneers of an enlightened civilisation. In China and Japan—not to mention other countries in Asia—in Abyssinia (where the only Amharic Grammar and Dictionary were compiled by a Missionary), in Africa, to give only the best-known instances, they have been the initiators of whatever knowledge has been acquired of the languages of remote lands, and unknown tribes.

Yet few of them seem to have been endowed with the gift of writing a cheerful, unprejudiced, account of a country, and we must say that we have no special velleity, as a rule, for books written by missionaries. Excellent as are the motives impelling the authors to a missionary career, and self-denying as may be their lives, there is, in their works, as in their conversation, so far as we have ever had the opportunity (and this has not rarely been the case) of judging, a marvellous obliviousness of the fact that the world contains other "humans" besides missionaries and (more or less) possible converts. Not to say that it is not always possible to believe in these converts. "Rum-converts" have passed into a proverb. Nor is it so long since that, at (we think)

* "Madagascar and France, with some account of the Island, its People, its Resources, and Development." By George A. Shaw, F.Z.S., London Mission, Tamatave. With Illustrations, Photographs, and a Map. Religious Tract Society, 1885

Saharanpoor—of which district our informant, as we know, was magistrate—a “convert” having, as a bright and shining light, had his debts paid twice, told the missionaries that, if they did not square up a third time, he would preach against them in the Bazar, knowing, as he said, the Scriptures as well as, and the Vedas a great deal better than, they did.

But, as regards Madagascar, it oddly enough happens that most of the information popularly available is derived from Missionaries. (We do not, of course, speak of Consular Reports, or other documents which, though available to anyone who chooses to purchase them, and from which we may probably have to quote, remain, as a rule, on the shelf until required to line trunks or to light fires.)

Everyone who wishes for information about one of the most interesting islands in the world will have read Mr. Ellis's account of it. Though not without a little of the—we must not say professional—leaven, it is a plain, and fairly well written, account of the country and its people. The letters from “Rainietaka, 13th Honour, Officer of the Palace,” tickled our fancy, we remember, amazingly. But it is now so long since Mr. Ellis's book was issued, that we welcome a work which refreshes the memory regarding the many peculiarities of Madagascar (to which it is a veritable handbook), besides fully dealing with its history, natural and other, and its inhabitants.

Commencing with a general description, illustrated by a map, of the island, and a very interesting account, exemplified by well-executed woodcuts, of the people, and their manners and customs, our author comes to the attempts of the Dutch, English, and French, successively, to obtain a footing on the island. Unhealthy as in an undrained state it was (and, in spite of all attempts at drainage, in many places, still is) to all but its inhabitants, the fame of its great fertility and abundant mineral wealth had even then got abroad; and at this we cannot be surprised when we know that it teems with gold, silver, lead, copper and iron, as well as precious stones and coal. It is also a splendid country for coffee and sugar. The vicissitudes which war brought about in the possession of the other islands—such as Mauritius and Bourbon—which lie near Madagascar, did not, it would seem, affect the French tenure of the little island of St. Mary, but three miles distant from Madagascar. So far back as 1672 the Grand Monarque, who aspired to universal rule—(“Think nothing done, he cried, while aught remains” to conquer)—finding his troops well employed in Europe, launched a proclamation annexing Madagascar (then called “Ile Saint Laurent”). But it was not till 1774, 102 years after the date of this precious proclamation, that any steps were taken to enforce its terms, and then by a Polish adventurer, Beniowski, who, to use Mr. Shaw's phrase, was “the only man who ever gave promise of an ability to organise and govern a French colony in Madagascar.”

When, by the Treaty of Paris, we retained the conquered island of Mauritius and its dependencies, Madagascar was nominally included among the latter, and was accordingly formally declared British territory. The French Governor of Bourbon protested, and in 1817 the British Government “handed over all our possessions to the Hova King Radama I., who was just then beginning to make his power felt throughout the island,” and, by a subsidy of arms (p. 81) and the not less significant presence in his camp (p. 83) of the British Resident, aided him in asserting it.

Various French attempts on the island are narrated in detail by Mr. Shaw. Our space prevents our following him through his interesting, and, seemingly, impartial account of these; and we come at once to the high-handed proceedings of the half crazy French Admiral, Pierre, in the course of which Mr. Shaw suffered great and wanton indignities—for which, after long delay, he received some insignificant compensation from the French—and which commenced in May 1883, by the wanton bombardment, without the usual notice to remove women and children, of the Towns on the North Eastern Coast, including the principal port, Tamatave.

Henceforth we are in company with an eye-witness. Mr. Shaw played no inconsiderable part, as became his missionary capacity, in alleviating the sufferings of the people until himself arrested on the pretext that he was interpreter (which, as an Englishman, he had a perfect right to be) to the Consul, Mr. Pakenham, then in an advanced stage of disease, and that he had been the adviser of the proceeding of the Hova Governor, who rejoiced in the name of Rainandriamampandry, and of whom a characteristic portrait faces p. 160. The later proceedings of the French, their compulsory inaction during the war with Ton-king, are well known, and public interest in Madagascar affairs had become languid, when it was suddenly revived by the news, received but the other day, of the establishment of a French Protectorate over the whole island, an event with the far-reaching consequences of which we deal on another page.

To all who feel desirous for information pleasantly imparted, on Madagascar, its history and inhabitants, we say, read Mr. Shaw's book now before us. The account of his personal sufferings, caused by his devotion to the people he loves, if less generally interesting, is yet worth perusal as the latest published instance of the callous indifference to suffering, and the active brutality, with which the French are well known to make war.

A HISTORY OF TORYISM.*

“What,” said Lord Beaconsfield, “is the Tory party, unless it represents national feeling?” The inference contained in this query Mr. Kebbel, in reproducing a series of Essays on “Tory Prime Ministers” contributed to the National Review, has undertaken to enforce, and well he has done it. It appears to us that there can be no question that the great Tory party have, throughout our modern history, been far more en rapport with the bulk of the population than the “Liberals,” “Radicals,” call them what you will, who have used the labouring classes—whether, as hitherto, those of the towns, or, as in the last election, the peasantry—as a means to keep themselves in office. It is easy to persuade new voters, proud of the chance of making their influence felt, that whatever is wrong. Attack is usually easier than defence. Any—we must not say fool, but—half-informed man can assail, with plausible arguments, any institution of which he knows but little, while it requires one who has thoroughly studied the subject to refute him point by point; and, in a mixed meeting, such as usually influences, if it does not determine, an election, what proportion of the artisans and yokels can duly weigh or appreciate the arguments for or against? To them the attack sounds incisive, the defence not a little wearisome. So the result is all but inevitable; they go for the side which advocates change of some kind, profoundly ignorant what will be its nature. When people can so far be gulled as to purchase halts before going to the voting booth in full assurance that they will bring back the (imaginary) promised cow, does this gain promised, on condition of a vote, differ from the promise of a “real golden sovereign” on the same condition? If so, in what respect?

The politics of every nation must of necessity be twofold—internal and external. Of external politics the less educated classes know absolutely nothing. That dominion abroad is the very soul of commercial prosperity, that the loss of a colony would, as a Radical of the Radicals said, be equivalent to throwing a large city out of work, these things are carefully concealed by the democrats from the bulk of the population. If the people want to know these facts, they shall have no help from Radicals in ascertaining them. At best they shall have but half truths. “Populus vult decipi et decipitur.” “The people will be deceived, so be it,” is the Radical motto. Mr. Kebbel opportunely reminds us, that from Pitt downwards the Tories have maintained, or, at least, tried to maintain, one principle. It is the selfish, but, at the same time, the wise and just one of British interests. “I hope,” said Canning, “that my heart beats as high for the general interests of humanity as any one who vaunts his philanthropy most highly; but I am contented to confess that, in the conduct of political affairs, the grand object of my contemplation is the interest of England.” As Prince Bismarck once said, a species of national egoism is the sole guide of a great State in foreign politics. The great English Foreign Ministers have never hesitated to interfere or intervene in the affairs of foreign States; but, then, they required to see clearly the bearing of their intervention on English interests. It has always been under Tory Governments that England has occupied the highest relative position as a member of the European family.

As the Radicals have throughout tried to hoodwink the people as to their real interests, so have they habitually endeavoured to deprive them of real social, as opposed to fancied political, advantages. No one so vigorously opposed the Factory Acts as the Radical manufacturers. And social legislation for the good of the labouring classes was never more consistently and earnestly pushed than during the six years' Government of Lord Beaconsfield. We cannot do better than let a workman speak for himself, as he did not so long since in the columns of a contemporary:—“I read upon the authority of ‘Hansard’ that by far the greater part of reforms for the benefit of the working classes has been due to the action of the Tory party. I need only mention the Factory Acts, initiated by that great philanthropist, Lord Shaftesbury; the Artisan Dwellings Act, as praised by the late Mr. Fawcett and the Marquis of Hartington; the Employers' and Workmen's Act, which received the eulogies of Mr. Odger and many of the accredited leaders of the working classes; the abolition of the truck system, so much opposed by the ‘friends’ of the people; the Criminal Law Amendment Act, twice passed by the Tory Lords and twice rejected by the Radicals when in power; the Housing of the Poor, the outcome of Lord Salisbury's essay in the National Review; the Household Suffrage of 1867, as opposed in its entirety by the ‘residuum’ threats of Mr. Bright and the £5 and £6 franchisers of Mr. Gladstone; the Reform Bill, which has just become law, and which the Radical Daily News had the manliness to declare was equally as much Lord Salisbury's as it was Mr. Gladstone's; in a word, to quote the memorable words of Mr. Macdonald, the late Radical member for Stafford, ‘You have gained more from the Conservatives in respect of matters affecting the working classes than the Liberals would ever dare have done.’ Therefore, from a ‘Liberal’ point of view, I am a ‘Tory.’”

We have here evidence, which it would be folly to ignore, of the superiority of the "wicked Tories" in studying the real interests of the nation, internal and external. Mr. Kebbel has done well in bringing these and similar facts plainly out. His work will, as it deserves, remain the standard book on the subject with which it deals so eloquently and so exhaustively.

* “A History of Toryism.” By T. E. Kebbel. London: W. H. Allen and Co. 1885.

A COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE QUR'ÁN.*

We have before us the third volume of Mr. Wherry's "Qur'án." Taking Sale's well-known translation as his basis, that gentleman has added thereto further explanatory notes, and compared, in some instances, the renderings of other translations with the passages in his text. The result is an extremely valuable Commentary on the sacred volume of the Muslim world; and, to add to the utility of the present work, each Súra is prefaced by an Introduction giving a slight sketch of the chapter it precedes, the date of its Revelation, so far as can be traced, while, to complete the improvements in this new edition of Sale, a list of the principal subjects is added, so that a student in search of a particular passage will have some clue to its whereabouts. It is, perhaps, no disparagement to the volume under criticism to say that a fine translation of the Qur'án has yet to be written—a translation, that is, which, while retaining in some measure the fine-balanced sentences and rhythmical lines of the original Arabic, shall at the same time be a faithful and just rendering of the original Arabic—adhering to the literal meanings of the various words, but clothing them in such a garment of eloquence that the diction shall, in some degree, be a reflex of the exquisite and incomparable original. Admittedly, the task is not easy; perhaps, indeed, it is impossible, but until, and unless it be accomplished, no reader can have the slightest notion of the truly sublime beauty of the most polished and ornate composition in one of the richest languages given to man.

What Mr. Wherry has done he has done carefully and well, and the work may, with advantage, find a place on the shelf of the student of Oriental theology. More than this was not, we fancy, within the scope of his labours.

EMINENT WOMEN SERIES.†

The life of Elisa Rachel Félix is one of singular interest. Born of a Jewish family in poor circumstances, whose wanderings, in search of subsistence by colportage or otherwise, were such, that no two children were born in the same place, she first saw the light of day in 1821, at a village inn in Switzerland. Ten years later the family settled at Lyons, and two of the girls were sent out to sing in the streets. Of these Rachel was one, and the theatrical instinct first displayed itself one day when she could not otherwise get money, in an admirably executed fainting-fit, which procured her some food, a glass of wine—vin très ordinaire, we may be sure—and, the hat being sent round for her in a café, ten francs. Her voice attracted the notice of no less a person than the late Victor Hugo, and, later on, that of a singing-master, Choron, to whom she owed her release from street-singing, and who first put her foot on the (lowest rung of the) ladder which she mounted with such splendid success. Her father was a hard, grasping man, and with her it was for many years toil without profit; he took nearly all she earned, and it is painful to read, that until the day when she reached the age of twenty-one, and was thereby set free from parental control, he allowed her but 300 francs monthly out of the large sum which she received from the Théâtre Français.

Yet she was always the best of daughters, never resenting his treatment, while adoring her mother; and her letters to her parents, however indifferently spelt and expressed, are models of filial devotion and tender consideration.

We shall not attempt to follow Mrs. Kennard through the story, so well and sympathetically told by her, of Rachel's early struggles, of the hope engendered by success, alternating with the all but despair caused by temporary failure; though it was at this period of her life that the better qualities of the woman were most visible. Once become a celebrity, it was to a great extent in her own power to continue one, or to lose her popularity; and, in Paris at least, she managed to do the latter. Haughty, unbending, capricious, and too little prone to conciliate the susceptibilities of others, she offended both authors and actors; and was visited with the retribution which the authors and actors of Paris so well know how to award. The history, however, of the latter part of her life, which was passed in the full glare of publicity, is known by everyone who has taken the slightest interest in matters theatrical, though it has never, to our knowledge, been so completely and so well narrated in English. It is rather as an individual than as an actress that

NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.*

It has long been a reproach against the English language that its diction is indefinite, uncertain, and ill-digested. The reason is twofold. In the first place, the nation is so eminently practical that, provided a word expresses what is meant, the world at large care naught as to its origin or the source whence it is engrafted into the language of the day; while, in the second place, no one has as yet devoted the research and enquiry necessary to elucidate a subject which is beset with difficulties at every turn. It is not to be supposed that the ways and habits of a nation are to be changed in a day; and it would be sanguine to suppose that the busy, pushing, struggling Anglo-Saxon race will ever be aught than slipshod in conversation and lax in language; but, thanks to the efforts of Dr. Murray, it may be hoped that all who wish to glean information in regard to the words they use and the tongue they speak will henceforth have a trusty companion and a sure guide to direct their wandering footsteps. But what, it may be asked, is a Historical Dictionary? Briefly, it is a work designed to give the "history" of every term in the English language, so that at a glance the reader may find not only what is the origin of the various words (whether current or obsolete), but also the date at which they first came into use as exemplified by quotations. A few examples will suffice. "Absorbed," literally swallowed up, imbibed, figuratively engrossed or entirely occupied, in which latter sense it was used for the first time by an author of note in 1763, when Horace Walpole wrote in his correspondence that Monsieur de Nivernois had been absorbed all day. . . . translating "my verses." Then after an interval of just a century the word reappears (1862) in the London Review, where it is used in its literal sense. The passage runs: "Large sums are paid . . . to the officers of the absorbed company." Three years then elapsed and we find Dickens writing, "He eyed the coming tide with an absorbed attention." In 1871 Stewart refers to the "laws which regulate the distribution of absorbed heat;" and, lastly, after a further interval of five years (1876), Freeman, in his history expresses himself thus: "Absorbed in his own meditations." Yet another illustration. We learn that though the word "absorbent" was used as a substantive for the first time as far back as the era of Quincy (1718), yet its synonym, "absorber," did not see the light of day till 1861 in the pages of the Saturday Review. It will readily be seen by these two examples, extracted from thousands occurring at every page, what a rich vein of information is contained in the valuable work now presented to the public—a work the more useful, too, in that it not only affords a guide to the etymology of words as well as to their mode of use amongst the great masters of language, but is at the same time a full index to the quotations from celebrated writers, both of the present generation and of days long past. Nor is the range confined to one branch—a place is given alike to the colloquial, the slang, the common speech of the hour as to technical, scientific, and dialectical terms; while even foreign words naturalised into the English tongue find a home in this agglomeration of all that is known or can be traced regarding the language of this Empire. Truly, indeed, the labour must have been stupendous—bewilderingly stupendous. The imagination can hardly picture to itself the toil and research involved in tracing 2,000,000 quotations. True, the toilers were many, and distinguished in their various lines—men, for the most part, who might be expected to lay their hands more readily than would be the case with mere ordinary readers upon the various passages which tend to elucidate their individual line of thought. But, even so, fancy dealing with examining, sorting, applying such a huge collection of extracts—extracts as varied as the subjects to which they relate, and as crude and "raw" as the schemes of many a modern reformer! Twenty-five years have elapsed, we are told, since the idea was first broached—a quarter of a century of labour. Death has been busy in the interval; but as fast as one devoted enthusiast paid the debt of nature, another took up the tangled thread; and now this confused chaos is being gradually digested and brought into shape. The result, so far as the two volumes already produced, is, in the highest degree, satisfactory. The plan of the work, its general utility, its conciseness, so far as each word is concerned, and its fulness, as regards the extent of its scope, reflect the highest credit upon every one interested in the production of a dictionary, the value of which it would be impossible to over-rate. It marks an epoch in the history of the language; and Dr. Murray and his coadjutors might well inscribe on its title-page a proud motto similar to that which graces the frontispiece of many a humbler and less pretentious effort on Gallic shores, "Monument to the glory of the language and letters of Great Britain."

MADAGASCAR.

THE astounding announcement made in the French Chamber on Tuesday that, notwithstanding their proved inability to advance beyond the sea coast of Madagascar, and to put pressure on its Queen by threatening her Capital, they have succeeded in obtaining by treaty a protectorate over the entire island, and exclusive control over its foreign relations, appears to us to call for more notice than it has received. Whether or not the advantages obtained by such an engagement have, in accordance with the tortuous ways not unknown to French Ministers, been overstated, in order to influence the course of the Ton-king debate, enough of verisimilitude remains, in the version given, to demand the closest and most vigilant attention of our Foreign Office.

It is known to those who are in any degree conversant with the history of the magnificent island, that for two centuries, ever since the time of Louis XIV., France has been putting forward claims, which she has never been able to enforce, to it in its entirety, claims, the unfounded character of which has been most clearly shown by Mr. Shaw, whose excellent work on Madagascar (published by the Religious Tract Society, and of which we give elsewhere a fuller notice) seems to us conclusive on the validity of a demand resting on no better foundation than the alleged dependence of Madagascar on the little French island of St. Mary, distant some three or four miles from its shores. It was, however, to enforce this demand that the French commenced hostilities in 1883; commerce they had but little, for our late Consul at Tamatave, Mr. Pakenham, reported the Malagasy traffic with our own people as comparatively small and declining, while that of the French was no larger. After two years of desultory warfare, terms of peace had been almost arrived at last August, when negotiations were, at the eleventh hour, discontinued, owing to the invincible repugnance of the Hova Government to consent to a protectorate of the kind which the French desired to establish; but in which, it would seem, the Hovas have ultimately been induced to acquiesce.

To all intents and purposes (says the Globe) Madagascar now passes, like Tunis, under a French Protectorate. All the foreign relations of the Antananarivo Government are to be controlled by a French Resident stationed at the capital, and, although the Queen is still to exercise full sovereignty within the island, it is inevitable that she will gradually become a mere puppet, with but the shadow of regal authority clinging to her. We may expect, therefore, that French policy will guide the fiscal, as well as the political, relations of Madagascar with the outside world, and that Protestant missionaries will experience many difficulties and embarrassments from which they were free before the war.

How certainly the latter result would* follow can be readily inferred from the scandalous treatment experienced at the hands of the French by Mr. Shaw, himself a Protestant missionary.

But the matter has also political bearings of the highest moment to British interests, as will be seen by anyone who considers the commanding position of the large and fertile island, Cyprus, acquired by the wise prescience of Lord Beaconsfield commands the Mediterranean outlets both of the Suez Canal, now our normal route to India, and of the proposed Euphrates Valley route. Should the one—as it certainly would be in time of war—be blocked, and the opening of the other remain, as it is likely to be the case, in the clouds, we have but one route to India, that round the Cape. This has hitherto always been open to us. But what will be our position with France in Madagascar?

It has long been clear that France and Russia have, since the close of the Crimean War, when they suddenly became so effusively cordial, in the main been acting in concert. It is not to be forgotten that it was solely owing to the late Emperor of Russia that France was not, within four years of the campaigns of 1870-1, a second time overrun by German Uhlans. And this concert is not of good omen to us. The French Mediterranean fleet is at least as strong as our own, and could, without the necessity of sinking barges, do somewhat towards excluding us from the Suez Canal on the North. Once firmly established at Madagascar—and this is the very least which is implied by a French protectorate. France flanks our approach to India both from the Red Sea and the Cape. We need hardly point out to anyone, who has an Atlas at hand, what would be our position in India were the Canal blocked, or practically closed (whether by a French Mediterranean fleet on the North, or a French Red Sea fleet on the South), while our line of communication with India round the Cape was liable to be cut by a hostile squadron operating southwards with an arsenal at any suitable point in Madagascar, a Russian attack being made simultaneously on the North-West Frontier of India. We have no hesitation in avowing our conviction that the French occupation of such a position as they can now, at pleasure, hold in Madagascar, is as serious a blow as has been directly struck against British interests for many years by any foreign nation.

We extract the following from the Overland Circular of Messrs. W. J. & H. Thompson, of 38, Mincing Lane:—

There has not been any alteration in the position of our markets up to the close of to-day (23rd), and public sales are deferred until the 5th proximo. Many seem of opinion that a better tone will prevail when business is fully resumed after the turn of the year, quotations being, with some exceptions, very depressed. China Tea maintains the firmness already alluded to, and a small public sale this day will probably conclude the transactions of the present year. The quantity of Indian offered has been unusually heavy for the season, viz, 18,800 packages during the first two days of the week, including Ceylon; &c., which chiefly found buyers, the trade operating with confidence, and prices showed steadiness considering the weight of supply. A coast cargo of Bassein Rice sold again at some further slight reduction. In the Coffee market no change has transpired, the tone being dull, here and on the Continent.

THE CONQUEST OF UPPER BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—This conquest will probably have important consequences for the tea-planters of Upper Assam; the latter province can be connected with the rich Hukong valley and the amber, iron, coal, and other mines.

In the Sibsagar, or Rungpore district, dwell many gentlemanly planters, who will be greatly benefited by a railway from Sibsagar to the Khyendwen river, which flows through Upper Burma. The distance will be 102 miles. The first section from Sibsagar to Chen, thirty-nine miles, will be made without much difficulty; the whole distance is under the control of our police, who keep the Boree Nagas in order.

The second section, from Chen to the Hukong valley, has not yet been surveyed; we ignorantly gave the Wakhelayua valley to the Rajah of Muneepoor, who does not know what to do with it. This valley, thirty-two miles in width, lies between the Patkoi range and the Saramethi hills, and is watered by the river Lanier, a tributary of the Khyendwen. The distance from Chen to the River Lanier is twenty-six miles; our first proceeding should be to buy back this valley from the Rajah.

The third section is through the Hukong plain to the Khyendwen river, not yet surveyed.

T.

THE SUKKUR BRIDGE.

THE Sukkur Bridge will be the largest span bridge yet erected in India. It is in course of manufacture at the works of Messrs. Westwood, Baillie, and Co., London Yard, Isle of Dogs, and was recently visited by the Society of Engineers. This bridge will be constructed over the Rohri Pass of the Indus at Sukkur, on the line of railway from Kurrachee and Attock. It is designed on the cantilever principle initiated in the Forth Bridge, but it is much smaller, the Forth spans being 1,710 feet span. The Sukkur is of one span only, but that span is 790 feet in the clear between the abutments, and 820 feet between the vertical pillars. The centre lines of the main horizontal tie and the top of the large pillars and struts are 169 feet above the bed plates. There will be a space of 200 feet between the ends of the two cantilevers—one of which will rest on foundations on each bank of the river—which will be filled in by a girder, thus uniting the cantilevers and completing the span. The main guys, which have to hold back the whole of the structure, are 302 feet long, and are connected to anchors which are constructed of steel plates of very large dimensions, built in masonry below the surface of the ground at either end of the bridge.

The superstructure includes raking pillars 174 feet long, which incline inwards to a point 169 feet high, where they will meet the guys. There is also a series of struts inclining at an angle of 35 degrees towards the centre of the bridge, and also inwards, these struts being 210 feet long and 16 feet square at the centre. The platform for carrying the rails consists of two horizontal girders running from end to end, placed 18 feet apart, and having cross girders every 8 feet, the platform covering being of Westwood and Baillie's trough flooring. The bridge will be constructed of steel, of which material the cantilevers will absorb 3,200 tons; this is exclusive of the 200 feet centre girder. Each of the cantilevers has to be erected complete in the contractors' yard before being sent out to India, and in order to comply with this condition of the contract, a staging or scaffold has to be provided. This staging, which is in course of construction, will consist of about 300 piles, 14 inches by 14 inches, driven into the ground, and on these will be built up, in some cases, four lengths of 40 feet timber, one above the other, braced together with horizontal and diagonal bracing. This staging covers an area of 400 feet long by 120 feet wide, and will be 180 feet high when completed. It will absorb more than 2,000 loads of timber and many tons of bolts and nuts.
